Pit talks adjourn after order to seize NUM assets

Pit peace talks were adjourned last night and coal board managers were the coal board chairman, denied that there looking to a new "back to work" campaign was a rift over strategy ■ The High Court ordered sequestration of the mineworkers' union's entire funds.

By Paul Routledge, Labour Editor

Talks between the striking miners and National Coal Board were adjourned after nearly ten hours last night, to a date to be fixed. The High Court had earlier ordered sequestration of the National Union of Mineworkers' assets.

The union said it would fight on.

Mr Arthur Scargill, union president, said after the talks ended: "We are still in fundemental disagreement on the central issues"

Top-level coal board managers, however, are looking beyond the expected failure of current negotiations to a renewed campaign to get more miners back to work after the settlement with the pit deputies.

Yesterday's judgment by Mr Justice Nicholls effectively leaves the union financially incapable of continuing the strike at present levels. But its leaders have said they will carry on their battle against colliery closures "if we have to run the union from the streets."

London and Paris divided by explosive issue

There were deeply discordant versions from France and Britain last night of how explosives came to be found by British police at the French ambassador's residence. The French, playing the matter down, said the police set up the "find" then used it to create an incident. But Mrs Thatcher used strong words in the Commons: "urgent discussions" had begun with the French into a "wrong" and "regrettable" attempt to test British security.

And in the Commons Mrs Thatcher refused to join in the French attempt to play down the matter. "This was a most regrettable incident and the French authorities are aware of our views", she told MPs. ."It was wholly wrong for the individual to have acted as he did, and they have regretted the misunderstanding." It was a matter of the most serious concern that explosive materials were brought into Britain.

According to one expert, a dog allowed to sniff at only one explosive might search just for that and not for other kinds it was also trained to find.

What happened after the dogs found the material has not been explained fully, though there was little the police could do as guests on French territory. When interviewed following the anti-terrorist squad swoop, the Yard decided not to prosecute after the Frenchman gave a full explanation.

Lloyds set to open branches on Saturdays

By Peter Wilson Smith Banking Correspondent

Saturday banking at key branches is set to become the practice at all of the big four clearing banks, after yesterday's announcement by Lloyds Bank confirming it will go ahead from

The big banks closed their doors on Saturdays 15 years ago. Barclays was first to roll back the tide in 1982 and now has about 440 branches open on Saturday mornings. National Westminster announced last month it would follow.

Only Midland Bank is now left. Yesterday it said it had "no immediate plans", but senior executives admit that it cannot afford to be left out. Midland is believed to considering its strategy and there is speculation it may link Saturday opening with free banking for customers who keep their accounts in the Lloyds is to open 75 branches on Saturdays in February and a further 125 by the end of April. Most will open only during the morning but in busy shopping areas some will open from 10 am to 3 pm. It also plans to capitalize on its big chain of estate agencies, Black Horse Agencies, 14 of which already have financial departments offering mortgages and in-

Mr Andreas Papandreou, the Greek Prime Minister, has deplored Western support for he Solidarity movement in Poland as hypocritical and as part of an American scheme to destabilize the Soviet block. "If the capitalist regimes of the West were so sensitive about democratic freedoms," he added. they should first condemn Turkey where people are executed, jailed and tortured every day."

Mr Papandreou was speaking to Greek reporters who had accompanied him on a three-day official visit to Poland, the first by a Western head of government. He seemed to be completely under the spell of General Jaruzelski, the Polish leader, whom he called a patriot who had proved true to his pledges.

He said: "The fact that Jaruzelski wears a military uniform must not lead us to the misconception that this is a military regime. It would be a mistake.

Yugoslav dissidents to be put on trial

From Dessa Trevisan
Belgrade

Ignoring pleas from many Yugoslay and foreign individuals and institutions the authorities have decided to go ahead with the trial of six Belgrade intellectuals accused of organizing illegal political gatherings with the objective of overthrowing the communist regime.

The case has been pending for months. The Government has been in two minds, aware of the likely repercussions on Yugoslavia's image abroad.

The decision to go ahead with the trial based on an indictment which carries the minimum prison sentence of five and maximum of 15 years, is indicative of the trend which seems to have prevailed in the Yugoslav leadership. The six were arrested soon after the police mounted a speciacular raid last April to disperse a private gathering of 28 Belgrade intellectuals which included the dissadent Mi Milovan Djilas. They have been free ever since. This, in itself, is without precedent, though it may have been the concession extracted under pressure of a prolonged hunger strike.

Three of the accused - Mr Vlado Mijanovic, Mr Pavlusko Imsirovic and Mr Milan Nikolic - have previously served sentences for their political beliefs. Mr Miodrag Milic, the oldest, was selected, presumably because it was on his initiative that Mr Djilas was invited

Mr Dragomir Olujic, a ounalist, was selected because he hosted the gathering, and Mr Gordan Jovanovic, a student and the youngest defendant, for doing the same on past occasions. Policeman arrested as thousands hunt kidnapped Polish priest

The Polish authorities, aided by sniffer dogs, have arrested a policeman for his involvement in the mysterious and politically sensitive kidnapping of the radical pro-Solidarity priest. Jerzy Popieluszko, government sources said yesterday.

Thousands of uniformed and plain-clothes police, directed by the Interior Minister, General Czeslaw Kiszczak, have been assigned to search for the priest, whose abduction has seriously one pressue is on to produce a quick result – either unravelling the guerrilla group responsible for the kidnapping or finding the 37-year-old priest – before a Central Committee occion

There have been at least

It can safely be assumed that some security police would prefer their officers to take a tougher approach against known Solidarity sympathizers. But Father Popielusko's kidnap appears to be in a slightly different mould. The authorities have to

Ministers try to pump life into WEU

Thirty years after seve n nations committed themselves to mutual defence in postwar Europe, their foreign and defence ministers gather in Rome today for a birthday celebration which could turn out to be no less historic.

They belong to the Western European Union (WEU) whose importance as a bulwark against the East has long been over-taken by Nato with its crucial transatlantic dimension. The 14 ministers from Britain. France, West Germany, Italy, Holland, Belgium and Luxemburg are trying, however, to pump new life into their moribund body not to compete with Nato but to help prop it up.

The initiative came from France, anxious to preempt what was seen to be a shift towards neutralism in West Germany. But it has received its strongest support from the Germans themselves, ironically no less keen to tie down the capricious French to the defence of Western Europe.

The modified Brussels Treaty of 1954, which set up the WEU.
commits the powers to go to each other's aid in wartime even more firmly than does Nato, which obliges them only to "consult" over what to do. The most sceptical members have been Holland and Britain represented at Rome by Sir Geoffrey Howe and Mr Michael Heseltine who have questioned the need for yet another active European institution for ministersand Eurocrats to worry over. Refuctant to be seen as obstructive, however, they went along with the others at last June's meeting of foreign munisters in Paris where it was decided to revive the WEU in principle. Now they are faced by the more demanding job of deciding what to do in practice.

Decisions will now have to be taken over what to do with the WEU's subsidiaries, its Armaments Control Agency and Standing Armaments Com-mittee, whose usefulness has been superseded. Britain for one would like to see them merged and their workforce of 60 turned into a European "thinktank" on defence.

One proposal almost certain to be adopted is for the foreign ministers to meet twice a year instead of only once as at present. Another is for closer links between the WEU council (based in London) and the 178strong assembly (headquarters in Paris) as part of a drive to get the defence message across to reluctant European taxpayers of deterring Soviet attack.

Rogers plea for 'deep strike' strategy

Mons, Belgium (Reuter) -Nato's Supreme Commander in Europe has appealed to the alhance to adopt a controversial new war – fighting doctrine in volving deep strikes into East Europe with conventional weapons in response to a Warsaw Pact attack.

Speaking at his headquarters here, he said the plan had already been approved by the 14 allied centers of staff in Nato's Military Committee.

The concept aims to delay or prevent enemy reinforce-ments reaching the front line. keeping number down to manageable proportions, it would exploit new technologies to track and hit targets up to hundreds of miles behind the battlefield.

If the Warsaw Pact invaded Western Europe today he said Nato would face the choice between capitulation or resort-ing to nuclear weapons "within days and not weeks" Because of shortages of ammunition, trained reservers and pre-positioned spare equipment, "we just cannot sustain ourselves in the conventional posture to the length that we should be able to." the general

Aquino's widow leads march of 4.000

From Keith Dalton, Manils

More than 4,000 demonstrators yesterday marched through the streets of Manila demanding the resignation of President Marcos after a commission of inquiry found that his chief rival, Benigno Aquino, was killed in a military conspiracy.

Led by Aquino's widow and younger brother, the marches assembled outside the General Post Office as riot troops stood by. There was no trouble.

Mrs Corazon Aquino told reporters she found it impossble to believe the killing of her husband was carned out without the prior knowledge or approval of Mr Marcos. Her brother-in-law. Mr Acapito Aquino, called Mr Marcos the mastermind.

General Fabian Ver, the armed forces Chief of Staff, two other generals, 22 soldiers and one civilian were found "indictable for the premeditated murder of Aquino 14 months ago. Fifty-nine opposition MPs meanwhile called on President Marcos to resign. As Comforces. Mr Marcos was "morally, legally and politically responsible" and should stand down, they said in a prepared statement. President Marcos has ordered the speedy investigation of the case and has relieved General Ver of his command at the general's request.

• WASHINGTON: A Congressional decision earlier this month to reduce military aid sought by the Reagan Administration for President Marcos's Government was an evident sign of growing concern over developments in the Philippines (Mohsin Ali writes).

The State Department on Wednesday welcomed as "a positive development" President Marcos's passing on of the reports of the investigation into the murder to a special pros-ecuting body. It said the United States trusted that, as President Marcos had promised those responsible for the murder, no matter who they may be, will be held accountable for their islamabad General Zia ul-Haq, Pakis tan's military ruler since July 1977, who has promised to hold national elections by next March, yesterday made the transfer of power to an elected house conditional on its pledge to continue his Islamic reforms and pursue policies strictly in accordance with the Koran.

General Zia, who was addressing the nominated provincial council in Lahore, appears to hove introduced a new and serious condition for the transfer of power to a civilian assembly and an elected government. The announcement was significant in being made in his first speech to the country's largest provincial council. He told the provincial coun-cil that, while he would arrange free and fair elections, the only people who could stand for election would be those who were God-fearing and would truly serve Islam. He asked people not to be misled by rumours that the elections would be cancelled because of the growing tension on the borders with India and Afghanistan. He promised that the elections would be held.

Later General Zia told journalists that if his Islamic experiment failed "you would state to the need first terms." get it in the neck first, regardless of what happens to me."

crime".

From Tony Duboudin Melbourne

The Australian Government has lost its bid to force Mr John Clunies-Ross, the former ruler, off the Cocos Islands. The High Court in Canberra ruled yesterday that the Government would be acting outside its constitutional powers by compulsorily acquiring the remaining land owned by Mr Clunies-Ross, a descendant of Captain John Clunies-Ross, who occupied the islands in 1826.

In April this year the mainly Malay islanders voted overwhelmingly in a poll supervised by the United Nations to become part of Australia.
Mr Clunies-Ross still owns about 12 acres around his house on the main island after selling the rest to the Federal Government in 1978

The High Court made it clear that its decision was based only on law and did not take into account the social or political objectives of Government.

The Government had said that the proposed acquisition of the remaining property was to exclude Mr Clunies-Ross and his family from the Islands to prevent him or his family from voting or influencing any act of self-determination by the Budget goes ahead as power struggle looms

The European Parliament income is larger than vesterday served notice on member states of a tough power struggle to come by the curious EEC device of adopting a supplementary budget exactly the same amount as had been approved by the Council of Ministers.

The Commission yesterday was prepared to implement the budget, worth just over £1.000m, which means that there will be cash available to pay bills until the end of the year. But Parliament has only made the money available by tinkering in a very sensitive way with the Council's figures.

In essence, it has arbitrarily

There were no calls for help. no claims by anonymous callers, not one hint where they might be in the huge and dangerous city: just empty desks and too much empty space around the cramped fourth-floor AP office in west

To a British reader, the names will mean little or nothing: Mohieddin Habbal, the AP driver; Nicola Chafteri, the news agency's Middle East accountant: Charles Assi, the office manager; and Khazen Abbond, the radio monitor.

You can't argue with glass that talks

Some time ago two bright STC scientists came up with a rather novel idea.

They were experimenting with threads of pure glass the thickness of human hair as a possible practical optical wave-guide with important potential in a new form of communication.

Optical fibre transmission had been born. Even in those early days, nobody could argue with its potential for having an almost unlimited capacity for high quality signals.

Over the years, we've remained in the forefront of the production and technical perfection of optical fibre in the UK. After having developed the first practical transmission system between Hitchin and Stevenage we opened Europe's first factory for optical fibre cable. We have produced the world's first high-capacity commercial singlemode optical system that operates between Luton and Milton Keynes.

And currently we're producing the world's first international underwater optical fibre cable system. Key components in both these systems are high-powered STC lasers for signal transmission.

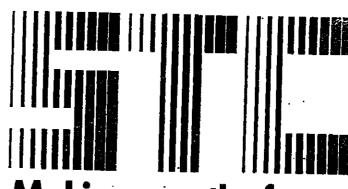

All these things demonstrate the international scale of STCs transmission activity.

Thanks to inventions like talking glass. British communications has a future well worth speaking of.

Elaine May is a director whose films have a flavour all their own; but it does not seem to be a flavour for which there is a wide taste. Her first picture. A New Leaf. a wonderfully offbeat comedy, seems to have attracted only a small following. and The Hearthreak Kid won even less favour. Mikey and Nicky was made eight years ago. To date her latest film, it has only now reached the screen in this country. The touble with Ms May is that she and her films are so hard to classify: this one pursues its way as comedy, but form: Mikey and Nicky quite waywardly follows the events of one night, and ends with death in the morning.

The most distinctive characteristic of the films is that they are essentially duologues, wonderfully accurate in the writing, and recalling her days as Mike Nichols's pariner in stand-up comedy. A New Leaf was a duologue between Walter Matthau and Elaine May herself: this one is performed (outstandingly well, incidentally) by John Cassavetes and Peter Falk.

The night begins when Nicky. traumatized by fear that a gangster has a contract out on life. calls up his friend Mikey. Mikey persuades him to leave the holel room in which he has holed up. As they wander from place to place, Nicky grows to suspect, quite accu-rately, that Mikey has been deputed to deliver him to the hit man. Through the night Nicky leads the chase from place to place as Mikey tries, with growing desperation, to bring about the necessary rendezvous. The façade of their protestations of love and loyalty gradually crumbles to expose love him; "Sheik" comes to her the ingratiating Nicky's innate school in New Jersey to smash meanness, malice and madness and Mikey's angry resentments.

For all its formlessness and Ms May's essential misanthropy it is consistently intriguing, not least for the incidental characis full of fearful cruelty and ends ters: Ned Beatty's workaday in tragedy. Then too they contract killer grumbling about observe no regular structural parking problems and the cost efficiency of his job; Sanford Meisner's asthmatic mob boss; and Carol Grace as the pathetic. psychotic girlfriend who is the butt of Nicky's sadism.

Baby, It's You is an oddity directed and written by John Sayles, who in Return of the Scrausus Seven first demonstrated his shrewd skill in portraving the mores of the young American middle class. This film, completed early last year, is set (nostalgically for those now in their mid-thirties) in a high school in 1966. Jill (Rosanna Arquette) is a bright girl working her way determin edly towards drama school. The climax is a prolonged nude scene in which the buillighter and Bo rub themselves together a good deal in sumulated copulation. No expense has been spared; a special credit announces that the music for the love scenes has been scored by Elmer Bernstein, with Bernstein Junior (Peter) doing the rest. No doubt this pièce de résistance distracted the writerdirector from the dialogue, which is in every sense unspeakable.

Dreamscape seems symptomatic of contemporary Hollywood prodigality: a cast that includes Max von Sydow, Christopher Plummer, Eddie Albert, Dennis Quaid and Kate Capshaw - not to mention a plethora of special-effects expertise - is squandered on a science-fiction scenario that would hardly have served for a Forties second feature.

The idea - the invasion of other people's dreams by psychics - is intriguing enough; and the denouement, in which two people representing good and bad angels battle for supremacy in the dreams of the President of the USA, is done with some panache; but between times it plods very predictably. The director was Joe Ruben.

Fires of London

The time when composers wrote incomprehensibly about their music is long past these days the programme notes sometimes threaten to be more interesting than the music. Robert Saxton ran that risk on Wednesday in his verbal description of his new piece written for the Fires of London. The Sentinel of the Rainbow. Here was the picture of a god standing beside the rainbow bridge and blowing his trumpet to make all things new. Could the piece possibly live up to such imagery and not sound like the end of Das Rheingold."

Yes it could. The work is one of aerial brilliance, in sound, in rhythm and in form. Saxton speaks of a movement of gradual ascent towards the B treble brightness of piccolo, sopranino clarinet, high strings and quick glistening piano, but the music is bright and clear, too, when its register is lower. He was never a goody-goody. and the best role ever created for him (in a work long since shamefully buried by the Royal Ballet) showed him as a very naughty lad, but what we shall chiefly remember David Wall for is the humanity with which he invested his roles. Not, alas, a ballet with much humanity in it. MacMillan's melodramatic parody of life in royal and imperial Vienna has one of the stagiest collections of characters imaginable, from a particularly daft group of the tarts apparently indispensable to his dramaturgy to a group of stuffed dummies labelled as emperor, prime minister, older and younger sisters (a small prize to anyone identifying them) and even, slanderously the empress's lover. Prince Rudolf alone has vast variety of incidents. Every possible alternative explanation of suicide is crammed in somehow: drink, drugs, disease, sex, nationalist politics, par-ental coldness and Wagnerian love of death all get into the act. It is a measure of Wali's greatness as a dance-actor that he somehow manages to suggest a consistent suffering person at the heart of it all.

It was good to see him dancing, for this last time, at the top of his form; every step, gesture or look perfectly focused and projected. Good. too, to have one of his earliest remaining colleagues. Ashley Lawrence, in charge in the orchestra pit. There were cheers, flowers, banners, party streamers and quite a few tears. David Wall ended his dancing days, as he began them, with style. We shall

Making reality fit the dreams

Style-watcher Peter York spots two fast-moving changes in the look of British life: the arrival of the American tableau and the curious Georgian door epidemic

SOAP OPERA IN ESPERANTO

When McDonald's hamburger joints first arrived in London, the English were transfixed by the production values - the way the ideas of speed. cleanliness and courtesy became living theatre. The "kitchen" part was opened up and you could see everyone, in their uniforms, behaving like people in a thirties musical; shining tiles, silvery steel. That's how things ought to be.

The food really couldn't have mattered less. What really mattered was the way it all looked, which made it fun for kids and a reassuring place for their parents, who had always associated hamburgers with dirt and delinquents.

Before the bomb, the Tory Party Conference was proceeding along the same McDonald's lines, not merely heing, managing, cheering the troops but expressing the new Torvism to the world against a brilliant blue background. But McDonald's and the Tory conference are just two examples of the workings of Iableau theory in everyday life – everyday English life. We're learning it from America.

Tableau theory is my phrase for the American principles of presented and the American principles of the American pr tation. Take soap operas for example. The people of Britain – along with the peasants of the second, third and any other worlds – watch Dallas and Dynasty ravenously. You don't need ears; they have such title vignettes; such establishing shots, linking tableaux of such waxwork clarity that you know from the back of your cave what The Life is. You long for it or want to burn it down, or both.

Dallas and Dynasty are done in sign language that makes critics who don't realize how they're watched, think they're technically dumb. Thus every time we get an office scene in Ewing Oil the camera pans up the side of the building. This is to up the side of the building. I his is to show: a) that's where we are, and b) that it's a big place.

The title shots in Dynasty show the Carrington "estate" and house from every angle and the title vignette of Alexis features a Rolls-Royce to show she's English and his below for some property in door in high class. Soap opera is done in Esperanto.

Americans have always liked a person or a thing to look the part.

They worry if they don't. The American imagination doesn't like to be fettered by ambiguity or irony; it doesn't like to be clogged with layers of meaning or any of that stuff. This is why America is so consistently good at producing the appropriate dream for the times. Americans have always done things this way because they've had a peculiar set of problems to deal with. When you have to explain - to sell - to a mass market with massive ethnic and geographical differences. without common assumptions two centuries deep, often without even a common language (Spanish may overtake English by 2000), then you have to mime it out. Things have always worked differently here; people knew where they belonged, who they were, so they didn't bother expressing it. There are now people who've made money in the last fifteen years

who don't know the rules. It's all up er grahs, for sale. That's why that key American word, lifes/vie, the word that explains tableau theory at stroke, is so current here now. Shops are mad for lifestyle now, like restaurants. The concept store, the shop that coordinates The Look is the big thing.

But we've still a long way to go compared with the mass merchandisers of Madison Avenue, of Seventh Avenue, centre of Ragiand New York where they design the clothes, and of Fifth Avenue, where they sell them from window tableaux of an elegance so daunting they make most of London look like

The presentation - in advertising and in-store - for all-American brands like Estée Lauder or Ralph Lauren is a perfect tableau of what a certain life could be. The superb Lauder advertising photographs will be collected in a few years. The Raiph Lauren world - a dream England filtered through preppy America and presented in lifestyle shops as brilliantly designed as movie sets - says unequivocally what you're getting.

Our packagers are small beer so far, lower profile, more apologetic. And the tableau imperative still creates massive problems for those prickly journalists, photographers, advertising men and movie makers who want to work big in America but on their own terms. They go in demanding artistic control, they want to keep the subtlety, the ironies of English style, They learn. If they survive, and get the point, they become the people who take you aside and tell you "it won't wash here you know, all those little Kensington in-jokes... you've got to get out there and hit them

PUTTING A BOLD FRONT ON IT

A brown loaf and a haircut speak volumes. Little things one does --"small behaviours" the unfashionable social scientists call them -express big themes. For me the biggest small behaviour around now. the most expressive piece of everyday symbolism, is the irrestistable rise of the Georgian door.

Britain's favourite door, the door to the Thatcher future, to Princess Diana's fairy castle and, by now, to several million houses in the realm is in the Georgian mode. Neither the proportions nor the detail — especially the fanlight thing — nor the finish is remotely "right", as the art historians say. But it's the thought that counts.
You see this door everywhere, but everywhere. On my way to work -crossing North London - I pass this small low-rise block of Sixties council flats where everything was originally uniform, rectangular and the original design had glazed doors with a broad low-waisted "chunky" band of wood between the glass panels and a lightweight, ergonomi-cally designed letterbox with no weight or sound to it. But now half the block has Georgian doors - the

The door is on owner-occupied houses all over the country, I've seen it in every big provincial city, including Liverpool and in Scotland.

What is the thought exactly? Such a door does seem to say privatis-ation, or, on the council flats, a revisionist burst of bourgeois individualism. Georgian doors definitely say trading up.

But above all it says keep out, you. Georgian doors are strong and safe and solid, the very opposite of the let-the-sunshine-in glazed 1960s numbers. Georgian doors reflect a very real preoccupation with security everywhere. No doubt some of those millions bought them because they were the biggest strongest looking doors in the catalogue.

Whatever the precise mix of motives the Georgian door is a symbol of an aesthetic (vastly more important than High Tech, Pop Post-Modernism or any of the stuff design writers educated in a certain tradition wish to say is happening) that is spreading across the country at every social level.

The Georgian Door world is reassuring for it says that there is some continuity and that things and people have their place, (and some people have a worse one). It is snobbish, potentially, of course, butnot just in the old way because it's also the Style of Samuel Smiles Thatcherism now. Mrs Thatcher is hardly a snob about those old things or she wouldn't have the Cabinet she has or be building up the new kind of Tory Party she is. The neo-Georgian door suits the bootstraps Tory councillor who becomes an MP now. You can't imagine it on the Whitelaw house. This new snobbery may have overtones but it's got a deal of straightforward red in tooth and claw competition there too.

It's full of contradictions because it also bespeaks in a way most leftwing people never understand the "legitimate aspirations of ordinary people" who want their own places

To see of how far we've moved from the sixties to the Georgian door world think of the symbolic architecture and interiors of then: Those one nation, one world pious pluralist public buildings like the Commonwealth Institute (1962) in London. Or those City of the Future council estates on parkland making stark shapes against the sky. The author is style editor of Harpers

But despite its success the OU is now threatened. MEDICAL BRIEFING

Kidney crush at Brighton

The injuries of the victims of the Brighton bombing the crush syndrome. This syndrome was World War when it was soon apparent that patients who had been puried under masonry for some time frequently developed signs and symptoms of acute, potentially reversible, kidney failure. The mechanism of the renal involvement is complex: some of the damage is caused by the shutdown of the blood supply to the cortex, the outer rim of the kidney, following a fall in blood pressure or hypotension, which accompanies extensive injuries and blood loss. Further damage to the kidneys is caused by the release of myoglobin, a protein, from the crushed muscle into the circulation.

Myoglobin, even in the absence of hypotension, has a damaging effect on kidney function, as can be demonstrated in animal experiments, or in a very rare disease where excessive exercise causes muscle breakdown and renal impairment. The compressing effect of heavy masonry also obstructs the blood flow through a limb and thereby increases the likelihood of extensive tissue destruction. Myoglobin is excreted for some days after a crush injury, at any time during this period the kidneys are in

Fortunately, the number of cases of crush syndrome treated in a renal unit are now very few, although a similar condition is seen in heroin acute muscle breakdown if unadulterated heroin has been injected.

As the kidneys will recover in time, the aim of treatment is to maintain the patient's biochemical balance by a careful check on diet and fluid balance. If renal failure supervenes dialysis with an artificia! kidney can be used.

Safer joints

The inquest on Mrs Jean Adamson, wife of the former Coronation Street actor Adamson, Peter dence that she had had rheumatoid arthritis for many years, but died from septicaemia or blood poisoning.

The bacteria, staphylococcus aureus, had spread into the blood from an infected artificial knee joint and finally involved the heart. The coroner recorded a verdict of death from natural causes. Replacement knees are, for various reasons, less common than artificial hips. But the operation, since the development of new techniques, is being carried out more often and experienced surgeons are achieving what are known in the profession as "predictably good results".

In the 1950s and 1960s the knee joint was replaced with a hinge: unfortunately this had to be fixed down the centre of the bone with a large metal pin, which in time worked loose and became a site for potential infection.

The past few years have seen another advance in surface replacement knee joint surgery. The 1980s joint is all important. It is hoped that this joint will prove as successful and longlasting as artificial hips, but should the joint work loose this latest operation allows a fresh one to Mr Hugh Phillips of the Norfolk and Norwich Hospital, which has been carrying out knee replacements since the 1960s, said: "This operation is for the older age group, or for people whose knees have been destroyed by rheumatoid arthritis. It is designed to keep them doing the ordinary everyday tasks of life; it is not a joint intended for skiers or hang gliders, or even golfers."

Too much heart

The morale of middle-aged squash players took another knock when Leonard Rossiter collapsed at London's Theatre on October 5. But as Dr Paul Knapman, Westminster City Coroner, points out, press reports that he died of a coronary thrombosis are inaccurate. Although the actor had some coronary heart disease, he was also suffering from a comparatively rare disease causing over-growth of the heart muscle, a cardiomyopathy, and this caused his untimely death.

Sometimes a cardiomyopathy arises as a complication of other diseases, such as amyloidosis, leukaemia, systemic lupus erythecases the disease has no obvious cause. Mr Rossiter had hypertrophic occlusive cardiomyopathy; the cause of which is unknown, although it is thought that there is a hereditary factor.

in a case of occlusive, or obstructive, cardiomyopathy the muscle in the septum between the two ventricles, the powerful pumping chamber of the heart, becomes irregularly enlarged and obstructs the flow of blood from the heart. If a sudden demand is made on the heart, death can occur. In slow, progressive cases, the patient may complain of chest pain, breathlessness, an irregular heart beat, or signs of heart failure.

Diagnosis can be made by listening for a note added to the usual heart sounds - a so-called midsystolic short, squeaky murmur - by taking an electrocardiograph which may show a wide variety of suggestive changes, or by investigating the heart with ultrasound, an echocardiogram.

Once the diagnosis has been made the patient is advised to avoid competitive sports or violent ac-

What the cuts will immediately is to force the OU to reduce broadcasts (by more than a quarter) and the number of students (down from 25,600 new entries in 1983 to 18,800 in 1985) while increasing fee (from some £45 per credit in 1971 to about £300 now). After the disclosure that Michael Heseltine, the Defence Secretary, is to give evidence in public when he appears before the Commons Select Committee on Foreign Affairs next month, I can reveal that the committee has also elected to exercise its right to call Mrs Thatcher. When the suggestion was mooted, I am told that Norman St John Stevas, a committee member, flinched, and said "Don't you think we're getting into too much hot water?" - to which Labour MP Denis Canavan asked if St John Stevas had lost his bottle. The committee has also summonsed before it on Nov 14 Arthur Gavshon and Desmond Rice, co-authors of the controversial The Sinking of the Belgrano. Gavshon's evidence is likely to prove crucial: not only does he possess a six-hour interview on the subject with Lord Lewin, but he also has the tapes of an exclusive interview he had with Alexander Haig. These reveal that while President Belaunde Terry and Haig were negotiating the terms of the Peruvian peace proposals in the presidential palace, the British ambassador to Peru, Charles Wallace, was in the room.

Invisible shadow

Pity any opinion pollster who tried to predict today's results of the Parliamentary Labour Party's shadow cabinet election. Two backbench members of the "world's most sophisticated electorate" emerged from the secret ballot to pat Falkirk East MP Harry Ewing on the back and assure him that yes, of course, they had voted for him. A flattered Ewing tactfully had to point out they could not have done so: he was not standing.

Colour blind

During the Falklands war the Post Office maladroitly painted the anti-car bomb barrier around its Ulster head office in Tomb Street, Belfast, light blue and white - Argentina's national colours. Republicans in the city and perhaps the Argentines too were heartened by this apparent evidence of support for Argentina's Malvinas claim. Now the barrier has been repainted - in the bright red. vellow-red sandwich of the Spanish flag. Entirely unconnected. I dare say, to Spain's claim to Gibraltar.

Dickens and son

Another blow to Victorian values reaches me from South Africa, where Charles Dickens's only surviving grandson has apparently been traced and interviewed. Charles Tennison Dickens, an 84-yearold reured Postmaster General of India, claims his grandfather had an after with his wife's sister at the tarnely home in Kent. The illegitimate product, later banished to Yustralia, was the survivor's own father, "People don't want the truth. Dickens' reputation is as a moralist. a chammon of neglected children and family life", grandson Dickens crumbles, in fact, he says, he had "the morals of an alley cat".

Huwdunnit

Fast Lewisham Conservative Association has expelled Huw Shooter, the dandified Young Conservative fined £200 for his part in the destruction of a CND mock submarine in Brighton. The motion to revoke his membership, on the grounds that he had brought the association into disrepute, was passed by 24 votes to 22 on Wednesday evening despite his fulsome apologies. Shooter, who is praying the whole thing blows over before it puts his actuary's job at tisk, tells me the Tories have not got rid of him yet. He belongs to "several other" Conservative associations - although, "to save them embarrassment", he would not tell me which ones.

What will Reagan do for an encore?

this year. There is, however, another and statistically plainer reason why Reagan needs to act. The high interest rates rebound most savagely on government itself, which has no protection. The vicious circle of high federal deficits, high borrowing, high interest rates and high interest payments on federal debt are eating into the President's budgets alarm-

The Reagan administration's forecasts implicitly acknowledge this. Projections for the next term show the federal deficit gently declining from about $172bn in 1984 to $139bn in 1989. Although this is based on some dazzlingly optimistic assumptions about inflation and unemployment, the key presumption is that interest rates fall to about 5 per cent at the end of this president. The projections which have achieved widest general respect come from the bipartisan Con-gressional Budget Office, and its director, Mr Rudi Penner. Last February, Mr Penner was forecasting cataclysm. After the president's "down-payment" - his package of measures to reduce the deficit proposed this summer - Mr Penner did his sums again. They give a brighter picture; that is, one in which the federal deficit rises to $263bn in 1989, rather than $308bn. Put more favourably, this means the deficit might not rise in relation to national income, steadying at just under 5 per cent of GNP.

Even so, this is a formidable financial burden, and assumes that Americans are prepared to increase their holdings of government debt from a mere trillion dollars last year to two and a half trillion by the end of the decade. The cost of servicing this debt rises from 11 per cent of federal spending to 16 per cent. And every one per cent difference in interest rates raises or lowers the administration's bills, by the end of the period, by a formidable $26bn.

President Resgan can only put a brake on this by halting expenditure programmes - or raising taxes. Throughout the campaign, however, he has been closing options. He will not raise taxes; indeed, he will cut income taxes. Now, to the horror of some of his aides, he has committed himself to protecting social security, not just for present but future recipients. He is locked into a defence programme rising faster than national income. His "discretionary" spending amounts to only about 10 per cent of his budget.

So where are the escape hatches? An American administration is capable of wielding the axe among its employees and their wage bill far more drastically than its British counterpart. On the revenue side, there are rumblings of tax reform which may enable the president to stick to his pledge of lowering income tax rates, while simultaneously garnering new revenue.

Deep within the administration, there is talk of radical tax reform that would sweep away the system of income tax allowances and charge Americans a single flat rate, with extra revenue raised from expenditure taxes.

There is one major snag. In America, tax reform needs a longterm commitment. The slow workings of Congress and of American tax codes make it difficult to generate a quick fix for a gaping deficit the measures adopted this summer consisted mainly of reducing or delaying tax cuts previously agreed but not implemented. More fundamental change will have a much longer lead time. It does not look a task likely to appeal to an aging second-term president. But, most significantly, the issue of tax reform has the support of Republicans likely to have a strong influence on policy-making after the Reagan

Denis Herbstein on an improbable City takeover bid

A battle within for Britain's apartheid fighters

the Old Bailey and "City" was seen to have notched another victory.

The nub of this acrimonious argument is: who should AAM be trying to influence? The City group's high-profile campaign is intended to attract the support of minorities women's liberation, homosexuals, youth, blacks, and now the miners. But as Bob Hughes, a rare voice prepared to go on the record, says: We are a single-issue organization seeking to make the general public aware of the real story in South Africa and to expose Britain's role. especially in business, in bolstering apartheid. We are a broad coalition. If we tried to woo all those other movements we would become indistinguishable from any other political party on the left."

AAM has David Steel as one of its vice-presidents, and Jeremy Thorpe. Sir Hugh Casson and the prominent Methodist. Pauline Webb, are sponsors. And, one official added: "We have Torics and even businessmen as members." But the City group's success has highlighted what many ordinary members see as headquarters' staid and bureaucratic attitude. It happened once before, in 1969, when Peter Hain and the South Non-Racial Olympic Committee sought the movement's Springbok rugby and cricket tours. AAM refused, but the activists went ahead anyway, interrupting matches and contributing considerably to South Africa's isolation in world sport. After that, AAM joined in.

Again, in the 1970s, leading members of AAM were arrested outside Rhodesia House in the Strand. In general, behind-thescenes persuasion has been more effective under a Labour government. Now, after five years of Tory government and as society becomes more polarized, many people have become frustrated at the Conservatives' unchallenging policies on South Africa and, more especially, on the independence of Namibia.

Mr Botha's visit to Britain gave the movement an unexpected shot in the arm. Days before his arrival Mrs Thatcher, concerned at the clamour, invited Trevor Huddleston (who founded AAM with President Julius Nyercre) to listen to his views. And as the two prime ministers met Chequers, the movement brought 50,000 marchers on to the streets of London.

Juxtaposed to this orthodox style is the heady rhetoric of the Revolutionary Communist Group. It supports uncritically the IRA and whatever organization seems to be capable of overthrowing "imperialism". The group's heartland is the East End, with small but devoted followings in cities such as Edinburgh and Sheffield, all inspired by economist David Reed, formerly Jaffe. Of all the groups on the far left of British extra-parliamentary life it is the most vitriolically opposed to the Labour Party: "So far out on a limb", says a rival revolutionary. "that it influences no one in the broad Labour movement."

Members of the Kitson family prominent among the City group's candidates – demonstrating outside South Africa House in August 1982. Above, Labour MP Robert Hughes, concerned that the activists' tactics could lose AAM its identity

Stuart Holland, the most senior of the parliamentary candidates, is aware of the delicacy of the connexion. "By protesting outside the embassy, and now standing on the City ticket. I am hoping to inject greater activism into the movement. But I do not see myself as being associated with the RCG."

The temperature has risen recently with the publication in the latest Fight Racism! Fight Imperialism of a letter from the AAM general secretary. Mike Terry, telling City to mend its ways, or else. Membership, t says should be restricted to people living or working in the one square mile of the City, and their activities should be confined to that patch. The newspaper comments that AAM is acting like the British police who try to prevent miners picketing in other areas", adding that it would be "quite absurd to confine membership to stockbrokers and similar inhabitants of the City".

On Sunday, the AAM leadership will try to regain control over members of its hyper group. If not will they be expelled? Bob Hughes comments: "I hope it won't come to that. I don't want to stop all their activities: they are very keen. But it. needs tremendous discipline to operate a single-issue campaign with people you normally wouldn't be seen dead with."

Where Maxwell's bee fails to buzz saw or who has, like me, read the transcript of Mr Robert Maxwell's interview on C4's Face the Press programme last Sunday must surely be what Bertie Wooster, in moments of stress and foreboding, used to call a nameless dread".

It is not exactly news to those who have crossed his path over the years in politics or publishing that the new proprietor of Mirror Group Newspapers believes himself to be the reincarnation in a single, sublime, corporeal form of Napoleon, Lord Northcliffe. Andrew Carnegie and Genghis Khan. But it is still a shock to find that these great men, if it is indeed they who are speaking through Maxwell's mouth, have been purged of none of their monomania in the hereafter.

A very few utterances will show what kind of a tycoon Maxwell intends to be: "I could best sum up what is the relationship between publisher and editors of the Daily publisher and editors of the Daily Mirror. It's the same as the president of the US to the Senate – advise and consent." "Well, as far as the story about sub-editing Goodman's column, I plead guilty. I did cut it, it was a bit too long and I believe he will agree it was a better column." "My side who told you that I never "My aide who told you that I never admit being wrong must be mis-taken. I don't know that I have made any mistakes at the Mirror so

A natural reaction to this tremendous ego-trip is: "So what's new?" Most British proprietors have been playing for kicks of some kind or other, quite apart from the possibility of making money. Journalists hate this, but the fact is that in wanting (as he apparently does) some personal power and a short-cut to recognition by an Establishment that has rejected him on several previous occasions, Mr Maxwell falls into what might be called a conventional pattern. He will run his newspapers in the hands-on style of Lord Beaverbrook, and not the hands-off style of Lord Thomson.

He is entitled to do so, and sophisticates will console themselves that safety lies in that very principle: a few Maxwells and Murdochs and Rowlands, cutting each other's political and economic throats in healthy competition is a better guarantee of press freedom than a state subsidy doled out by Mr Tony

Maybe so. But that is not yet the main point at issue. At present the question of whether Maxwell is going to be an interfering owner or not is only a preliminary to another more important one - namely to what ends his interference will lead, Let us return to the C4 interview for On the content of his newspapers

Maxwell had nothing much to say except: 1) To repeat that he would support the Labour Party (I note, incidentally, that the new political correspondent says that she will work for the return of a Labour government: so much for journalistic impartiality: 2) That he will never give much space to the SDP trade union; 3) That he would go on advocating "Troops out of Northern Ireland" in spite of the opposition to the proposal of most of his readers; 4) He is presently in favour of shooting terrorist bombers after summary court martial and without the possibility of normal judicial proceedings or appeal.

This is (even so far as it goes) an incredibly flimsy platform for a crusading newspaper, and it is more than a bit dotty as well. The comparison with Beaverbrook breaks down abruptly at this point, That old spider may have deluded himself about imperial preference and the rest, but he knew what he wanted and he knew about propaganda. Mr Maxwell, as his previous political career made plain, has nothing much under his political bonnet except a certain amount of ambition, and a few aimlessly buzzing bees. Never mind, however, one thinks, Perhaps Maxwell's interference will at least lead to a brighter, more amusing Daily Mirror, even if it does not produce any coherent politics. But here again, although it is early days, the only evidence is negative. Nothing has happened at the Mirror since he took over that suggests the slightest journalistic flair on the part of the proprietor. He is not another Lord Cudlipp. He has no instinctive appeal of presen-tation. The paper, judged in its own popular terms, is dull, "bitty" and imitative.

Does all this matter? In one sense, erhaps not. The political influence of all popular newspapers has always been patchy and, since the television age dawned, it has become minimal. The continuing obsession about them held by nearly all British politicians is ridiculous. If Sir David English and Sir Larry Lamb were knighted essentially for political services to Mrs Thatcher, as is often alleged, they got their honours under false pretences.

The Daily Mail and The Sun probably did not win a single constituency - and by the same token Mirror readers wil know where to stuff Maxwell's political opinions when the time comes.

And yet in another way it matters very much. Having been involved in the early 1960s in the Mirror Group's meritorious, but ultimately unsuccessful, attempt to make the old Daily Herald into a semi-serious popular paper, I had no illusions about the limits of what can be achieved within a truly mass market. But I am convinced that the popular press has a unique function, in helping to cultivate a favourable environment for a mature political democracy.

It helps people to see, however dimly, that politics is interesting, important, complicated and worth arguing about in other terms than spoken or television images. Mr Maxwell may have been aware of this potential, but he apparently doesn't know what to do about it himself, and he doesn't seem to be prepared to let anyone else do it for

Where he scores, of course, is in the economics of his business. He successfully conveys the impression that he really will shut down his papers if the print unions give him too much aggravation. This ability, which has sometimes been called "the Mad Factor" in the case of Richard Nixon and Mrs Thatcher, has enabled them to cow the Russians, the Argentine junta and ther undesirable opponents.

It is a useful possession in certain circumstances, of which the present state of Fleet Street is probably one. But its utility is ultimately a sign of weakness. When reasonable expedients fail, send for Thatcher or Maxwell. They may produce a rebarbative product - but at least, we must suppose, it is better than going out of business.

I knew about the BBC's sound archives, and have worked with them. But it seemed a paradox to me that a broadcasting organization should have one of the great written archives in the United Kingdom. However, when you think about it, all the eminent and artistic people in the kingdom have worked in one way or another for the BBC over the past half century.

It is not surprising that there are some interesting and important letters buried in the mountain of paper. Much of it is unpublishable in direct quotation, for reasons of confidentiality, libel, and privacy. But it is hot stuff, I can tell you. You should see Shaw's majestic letter reviewing the first radio production of Captain Brassbound's Conversion. If I had been the producer, I should have gone out and hanged myself with a wireless lead.

The reason that Orwell's letters to various eminent people com-missioning talks were not filed under his name, was that they were filed under the names of his correspondents. In the same way we file our correspondence with the Gas Board under GAS rather than our own names; or, in the real world, we non-archivists stick the foul things under Uncle Henry's stone from the Tweed with a fishing fly painted on it, and hope that they will go away.

Kidnap for the priest: trouble for Jaruzelski

In the game of snakes and ladders that is post-Solidarity Poland' General Jaruzelski has trodden on a inake. If Father Jerzy Popieluszko. the outspoken champion of Solidarity who was mysteriously kidnapped a week ago, is found dead. then the general is in serious trouble. Church-state relations will be put back in the refrigerator, the West will think again about how quickly Poland should be rehabilitated and the United States will be in no rush to lift economic sanctions.

For some months now the general has been climbing, rung by rung up the ladder of "conciliation", Political prisoners have been freed, a working relationship has been established with the Catholic Church hierarchy and a caravan of western visitors is supposed to signal the end of Nato's diplomatic blockade. But the fragility of these achievements has been highlighted by the kidnap and the panic that has gripped those in power.

The dice fell last Friday night when a man dressed as a traffic policeman flagged down Father Popieluszko's car near Torun, northwest of Warsaw. The priest's driver was hit and manacled but managed to throw himself out of the moving getaway car and alert the Church that one of the government's most scathing critics had been abducted. The government, in an effort to show that its hands were clean, launched itself into a frenzy of PHS activity. The militia is on permanent alert, a police hotline has been set up, suspects rounded up and one provisionally charged. The star witness (the driver) is under 24-hour protection, and film-star sized. photographs of the kidnap victim have been issued to senior officers. Suddenly Father Popieluszko - a butt of some particularly vicious propaganda and dirty tricks in the past - has been given celebrity The reason for this is that two questions have become intertwined: who is responsible for the kidnap, and who stands to gain from it? The second question is the easiest to answer, anybody with an interest in exposing the essential weakness of the Jaruzelski leadership can make capital out of the kidnap. That means, above all, hardline Marxisis, A plenary session of the party central committee which begins today is a perfect platform for hardliners who want to use the kidnap to demonstrate that rapid reform breeds uncertainty and ferment. The kidnap also came on the eve of the visit of the first leader a member-nation of Nato to Warsaw since martial law. It was a sore embarrassment.

The percentage of members of the Unification Church after two years compared with the number of initial inquirers is .5 per cent, not .005 per cent, as stated in Dr Eileen Barker's recent book and repeated in the feature of October 19.

Hardline Marxists flourish in this kind of crisis because their criticisms of General Jaruzelski are essentially correct. Hardliners say that the government may talk tough - the materials for the central committee session include an attack on "adventurist" priests - but at core they are chocolate-box liberals who want to live comfortably with the with Solidarity.

In private, the government propaganda chief urges party journalists to be more aggressive towards the Church and Jerzy Urban, the government spokesman, is encouraged to write sneering articies about Father Popieluszko. But, say the true-believer Marxists, the government has become a prisoner of its own thetoric, it conciliates out of weakness, not out of strength.

The kidnap of Father Popieluszko can thus be used to prove the point: the government claims to be against radical priests but will strain every libre to find one if he disappears.

Solidarity and the Church believe the kidnap was carried out by disgrunded members of the secret police, or at least by a vigilante group sheltered by police officers. A Solidarity investigation team has found there have been at least seven political kidnaps in the Torun area between February and August, Four of these cases were well documented, but the prosecutors' office abandoned them because of "lack of evidence". Most of the victims, held - and tortured - for no more than 48 hours, and then released. One of the victims found the following "communique" in his belongings after being freed: "We announce the establishment of the Anti-Solidarity Organization (OAS)

. the inefficient Jaruzelski group and the bureaucratic security service are not able to eliminate the cancer caling up our society - conspiracy and the fashion for opposition. Solidarity is this cancer. We shall fight this apocalyptic beast ... Even if there is no direct connexion between the kidnappers and those deep in the party establishment who are unhappy with the general, this venom can be turned to good use by those men who seek to embarrass and weaken the Jaruzelski leadership. The hardliners are not powerful enough to topple Jaruzelski - in practical terms they would need to hold another party congress and change the complexion of the central committee. As long as the general has Soviet backing for his reforms. he stays in place.

But the hardliners can roll back any movement towards a genuinely nluralistic society. They can push hard to make reform a sham. They can send the general slipping down the back of a snake and make him clamber up the ladder again from the bottom. It is a power struggle that could cost Father Popieluszko dying of starvation in Ethiopia and of rows of bodies wrapped in dusty sacking. The emotional reality has struck home of a problems. disaster whose magnitude has been reported more coldly in words for weeks and whose coming has been predicted by aid workers on the spot for months if not years. The present shock is a tribute to the emotive power of television pictures, but also carries an implied indictment of people's powers of imagination.

The first reaction is rightly that aid must be rushed to those in such desperate need. It is intolerable that there should be huge food surpluses in parts of the world while hundreds of thousands - possibly millions die of starvation. Floods of money have come from private pockets to the aid agencies, which is obviously a help (and good for people's consciences). but can only be a drop in the ocean. This is a matter for governments.

The British Government has immediately donated a further £5m as well as 6,000 tonnes of food. Efforts are being made to stimulate the EEC bureaucracy into immediate action, with some hone of success. It is reported that Russian military aircrast, suelled with United States help, are being used to help move food within Ethiopia. The Reagan Administration, which justifiably regards the Soviet-backed Government of Ethiopia with some suspicion and distaste has authorized about 45,000 tonnes of relief Drought and famine are not new things to Ethiopia. There are records of a disaster in 1540 and history records the "Great Ethopian Famine" of 1888-1892. In 1965/66 every second inhabitant of some districts of Wollo is said to have died of hunger. The drought that began in 1972 was one of the factors that brought about the downfall of Emperor Haile Selassie in 1974 and the coming to power of a military revolutionary government.

If the present disaster turns out to be the worst of them all (which is possible), much of the blame can be laid at the door of Colonel Mengistu's Government. The failure to end the civil wars that have been raging in Eritrea (for 22 years) and in Tigre (for nine years) is the main aggravating factor. The fighting has caused large unproductive refugee populations; it has for years disrupted the sowing and harvesting of crops; and more seriously the government has been accused of diverting aid aimed at the civilian population for the use of the army and of being indifferent to the suffering in some areas.

The Mengistu Government's own commission that investigated the causes of the 1972-74 famine found that "the primary cause of famine was not a drought of unprecedented severity, but a combination of long continued bad land use and steadily increased human and food aid. Lorries are a top stock populations over decades, rendering a greater number of people and their animals vulnerable when drought struck". Land reform was one of the priorities of the revolution, but in fact it resulted more in disruption of peasant patterns and food and cash crop production than in real reforms. The Government faced some exceptional difficulties, but it must be recorded that it has failed to provide the sort of agricultural set-up than can withstand droughts, as it and its Russian backers have failed to provide the sort of transport infrastructure that can deal with the need to move food urgently to parts of the country.

Drought will come again to Ethiopia. It is also a recurring misfortune in the parts of the Sahel and Southern Africa which are suffering at present. Aid is all-important at the moment. But once breath can be drawn again, attention should be paid at the highest level and with urgency to the long-term need to ensure that African agriculture is equipped to deal with the sort of natural conditions that will certainly occur. It is known that Africa's population is increasing faster than any other continent, and that its production of food is nowhere keeping pace and is actually declining in places. The remedies are also known: basically, a pricing policy by governments which helps the farmers rather than town dwellers; a concentration on food crops as much as cash crops; a need for sensible marketing systems involving small men and working with market forces. The children dying at Korem have a message for the world about avoiding future emergencies.

JUDGING NATIONAL SECURITY

Of the two main issues to be decided in the Guardian appeal the law lords are happily unanimous in deciding the more important in a sense that preserves the full scope of section 10 of the Contempt of Court Act 1981. The section put in statutory form, and hardened up, protection the common law had long afforded newspapers against being compelled in the course of legal proceedings to disclose the sources of their

The protection cannot be unqualified, for the public interest it serves may conflict with other considerations of the public interest. The 1981 Act meets this by providing that no court may order disclosure of the source of information unless it is established to the satisfaction of the court that disclosure is necessary in the interests of justice, or national security, or the prevention of disorder or

The present case arose out of publication in The Guardian a year ago of the text of a "Secret" memorandom sent by the Secretary of State for Defence to the Prime Minister about how to handle parliamentary and public announcements of the forthcoming arrival of cruise missiles at Greenham Common. The document had been sent to the another matter altogether. Nor newspaper anonymously. The Crown was granted an interlocutory order by a judge instructing the newspaper to deliver up its copy of the memorandum. The was then speedily discovered. Miss Tisdall was brought to trial under the Official Secrets Act and sent to prison, and The Guardian was sorely embarrassed.

The judge of first instance made his order on the ground that the photocopy was the property of the Ministry of Defence which was entitled to get it back. The House of Lords has now declared that that is wrong; that the protection given by section 10 overrides a proprietary right to restoration. That is just as well, otherwise no unauthorized leak in documentary form would be safe - very comfortable for the apparatus of effective press.

The other issue, and on this the law lords divided three and two, was the somewhat artificial one of whether on the evidence before him the judge would have been justified in holding that disclosure was necessary in the interests of national security, had he decided the matter on those grounds which he did not.

All agreed that the document published by The Guardian was innocuous, that it was of no value to anyone with evil designs on the national safety, although it was capable of causing political embarrassment, which is did anyone dissent from the view that in the light of facts subsequently made known it was necessary in the interests of national security that the identidentity of the person who sent it—ity of that mole in that position should be revealed. Nor did anyone think that the affidavit before the judge on behalf of the Ministry of Defence was anything but perfunctory. What the law differed about was whether the inference to be drawn from that inadequate affidavit were such as to satisfy a judge that necessity in the interests of national security had been made out, or whether the inadequacy of the affidavit vitiated the plea of necessity.

The differing judgments on that point have application only to this case. Of more interest are the indications the reasoned judgments give of the law lords' WIIIIngness behind assertions by authority that national security requires this or that. Some are more hesitant or more willing than others. But none was disposed to shelter behind the dictum of the Court of Appeal in 1916 that those who are responsible for the national security must be the sole judges of what the national security requires".

If that chilling dictum were to rule the law courts without qualification, they would have abdicated from an area of their responsibility to do justice between the citizen and agents of the state. And it is an area of growing extent and importunity. Some of the speeches in this case read almost like rehearsals for the Cheltenham GCHQ case. one of greater constitutional import in which judgment is expected soon.

October 24.

From Father Anthony J. Baxter, IC Sir. I have never before written to a newspaper but feel impelled to do so after watching the BBC news item of October 23 concerning the famine in Ethiopia. Sadly our sensitivities can become dulled by frequent exposure. through the media, to the sight of world disasters. But this far exceeds anything we have witnessed.

It was appalling and unspeakably sad to see the helpless misery of thousands of our brothers and sisters dying of starvation. A representative of the voluntary relief agencies told us that their combined resources would be totally inadequate in the face of this calamity. Meanwhile, in this country, at this very time, thanks to our farmers and the benevolence of our local climate we have reaped a bumper harvest and have a huge surplus of food on our hands.

I appeal to our leaders in government and to all members of Parliament of every party to take action immediately to ensure that our surplus is used to feed the starving of Ethiopia. Our politicians, however, can only act as our representatives: I appeal also. therefore, to everyone to contact today their member of Parliament asking him or her to bring this matter urgently before the House of Commons.

There are those in this country who want us to give the world a lead in abandoning weapons of mass destruction; here is a much simpler opportunity of giving the world a lead in sharing our plenty with those who are dying. If ever there were need for the rich to share with the poor, that need is on our doorstep. Not charity alone but justice demands that we do so. Can we, in conscience, close our ears to the appeal of those starving thousands of Ethiopia?

Christian feminism From Rabbi Dr Nicholas de Lange

Sir. I am neither a Christian nor a woman. I shall not, therefore, I hope be suspected of any parti pris if I venture to take issue with William Oddic's remarks (feature, October 15) on Christian feminism. But as a relatively detached outsider (who does feel he has a lot in common both with women and with Christians) I was very much surprised by his words.

I have always supposed that what he calls "the essential Christian doctrine of the Fatherhood of God" (which is also. I may say, a fundamental Jewish doctrine) is expressed in metaphorical language, and that to take the word "Father" literally is to fall into the pit of anthropomorphism, which main-stream Christian and Jewish theologians have consistently categorized as an impoverishing and ultimately dangerous intellectual error.

What is essential in the doctrine of Fatherhood is surely the image of a parent, not the question of sex. It's is hardly "revolutionary" to attack an error which has been consistently condemned since the beginnings of Christian theology. That the Church (which incidentally is feminine in all languages which still take gender seriously) is a male institution may well be a matter of observable fact; that God is male has yet to be proved. From what I know of Christian theology find it hard to accept that it is an essential Christian doctrine. Yours faithfully. NICHOLAS DE LANGE University of Cambridge. Faculty of Oriental Studies. Sidgwick Avenue.

Goals for 'star wars'

From Mrs Elizabeth Young Sir. Colin Gray is quite right, in his letter (October 16) on United States policy goals for "star wars" that it is "a gigantic step to proceed from the very modest ... research and development of recent years to the design, development, test and evaluation of a multi-layered architecture of strategic defence".

Where he is quite wrong - and Lord Chalfont before him - is in implying that Professor Freedman is in some way alone and eccentric in his doubts about the Strategic Defense initiative.

At the recent international conference at which Dr Gray. Professor Freedman and I were present, and to which Dr Gray refers, it became clear that no European government has been convinced of the merits of the SDI in its original form, and that even within the US strategic community enthusiasm is mainly confined to those with a business or professional interest in it. Moreover, the committed proponents did not succeed in answering many of the questions put to them about the

Because these questions were not considered before President Reagan announced his desire that American technology might lift the nuclear threat from mankind's future by developing "strategic defences" they must be considered now. The SDI does have substantial strategic, economic, financial and political implications and consideration of arguments against the SDI cannot as Lord Chalfont suggested (September 25) - "be treated with reserve until the research has demonstrated what is possible".

At the cost proposed, "the research is bound to produce impressive results. Whether results. they would "shift the balance of advantage between offensive and defensive systems", as Lord Chalfont suggests, cannot be known in advance; strategic theory suggests that "active defences" are more

Youth service as discipline for life

From Mr Charles Irving, MP for Cheltenham (Conservative)

Sir. I have followed with interest the recent debate in The Times on the issue of community service. It is an issue developed in the mind of people from all parties and vocations as they attempt to face up to the unrelenting high levels of unemployment in the western

I believe in view of the idleness restlessness and occasional recklessness which the scourge of unemployment incurs and the personal depression which emanates from it, particularly for young people who have still not found their feet in life. there is a strong case for some form of community service and for that service to be compulsory. This idea has already been invoked as a substitute for prison in certain cases and in others as an addition to imprisonment: the product of such service is a benefit both to the person concerned and to society.

to West Germany during Operation LionhearL why cannot the Govern-ment airlift food immediately to It is essential for those of whatever age who, normally through no fault of their own, have found Ethiopia? The expense of such an operation is irrelevant when the themselves without useful occupation and reliant on state cash, that their talents and experience should not be wasted but harnessed for some beneficial community pur-

There is a great danger when the world is fast changing through new technology that the unemployed and particularly the young unemployed will become alienated and estranged from the general thrust of society. If nothing is done to involve them in their community then they may well end up on the wayside of life with little hope of getting back on the гоad.

Community service, within the framework of which there should also be a military option, should be able to provide not just an escape route but a discipline for life in which young people in particular can gain experience and techniques enabling them to meet the challenges of the future.

A concerted effort must soon be made and now is as good a time as any to develop a constructive and well organised community service programme encompassing a wide range of options and which will cater for all needs and aspirations.

It should be so constructed as to complement the very valuable contribution of the Youth Training Scheme and together they will be instrumental not only in putting an end to the aimless wandering of streets and lapsing into bad habits associated with idleness but also give new interest and involvement to young people who desperately want something with which to identify and which will give them a new and vital purpose.

Yours sincerely. CHARLES IRVING. House of Commons. October 22

Local democracy

From Councillor Lufkin Skeet Sir. May I congratulate you on your leader "Parish pumps in decay" (October 17). It rightly identifies the prime issue, namely the future base of local government; should councils continue as locally elected bodies responsible within the rules pre-scribed by Parliament for the local management of a wide range of national services and accountable to the local electorate or, should such bodies be replaced with administrative authorities accountable to particular Departments of State? Only when that issue is resolved need the means of financing local government be reformed - and such reform is long overdue. if local government on either a single or double tier basis is to continue as locally elected bodies be spread more equitably over the local electorate. The present inherent weakness in local government, resulting from a system of representation without taxation eading to an increasing gap between the power to spend and direct political accountability to those who pay for the spending, is destroying local democracy. The arguments for local taxation then the costs of such bodies must to complement the rates are irrefutable. What is needed is the political will to implement such reform.

Nelson's Belgrano

From Mr Robert Hardy

Sir. Mr Measure's letter in The Times today (October 16), widening the possibilities of inquiry into the sinking of ships at sea in time of war from the Belgrano incident to the Bismarck action, prompts one to wonder whether his suggestions go far enough. What should now be thought of Lord Nelson's attack on the French fleet in the Bay of Aboukir, or of his not altogether dissimilar action against the Danish ficet in harbour at Copenhagen?

At Aboukir he ran alongside and and in the Copenhagen action nearly 800 Danes were killed and over 900 wounded. It might now be thought a specious defence of Nelson's behaviour to urge that these two victories. as they used to be called, were vital to the interests of England at war against those who directly or indirectly threatened her freedom, and the freedom of other countries. There are possibly not a few educators in this country today ready to point out to their pupils Nelson's reprehensible conduct in doing as he did.

Is it now time to forget the favour which the anagram of HORATIO NEL-SON found at the time of Aboukir, HONOR EST A NILO?

Alternatively, should we remind ourselves that war is not a game, and that once it is started brave men will be in mortal peril and deadly things must be done. Yours truly.

SDI do not in fact depend on the results of research into the plausibility of "layered defence", and so on.

Most of the proponents of the SDI, including in some contexts Dr Gray, seem to agree that deterrence and "mutual assured destruction" would remain central to the relationship between the United States and the Soviet Union, were strategic defences to be deployed. It would, however, be at infinitely higher levels of expense, and of risk; and of irrelevance.

Van Dyck portrait

From the Director of the National Portrait Gallery

Sir. In her article of October 19 Mrs. Geraldine Norman discusses the acquisition by the National Portrait Gallery of Van Dyck's important portrait of Charles II as a boy, which was bought for a relatively small sum at public auction unrecognised as by the hand of the master.

In this piece she quotes my colleague. Malcolm Rogers, as saying of one of our trustees, Sir Oliver Millar, "luckily for us he didn't see the painting". Dr Rogers did not make this statement, which, did great damage to a fleet at anchor, as Sir Oliver is also Surveyor of the inflicting the loss of over 5.000 lives.

Oueen's Pictures could suggest that rictures, coul his loyalty as a trustee of the Gallery might be in doubt. Sir Oliver did. of course, see the painting in the sale-room (no such eminent authority on Van Dyck as he would have missed it), and consulted with us about its acquisition in his capacity as a trustee; no question of competition would have arisen because, as Mrs Norman herself pointed out, there is already in the royal collection a version of the portrait.

Czech prize winner

From the Editor of London Sir. He immediately showed himself ready to use the wide powers to restrict people's movements which existed even before the unilateral declaration of independence. In early November, 1965, just before that declaration, he defended the newly proclaimed state of emergency on the grounds of a threat to security. In subsequent years he was a

The man who wants to stop extinction

Dr Myers had a good idea once. It was an exceedingly good idea, and he has spent most of his time ever since dilating profitably upon it.
His idea was that the destructive effect of mankind on his environment could be quantified, and that the resulting statistics Foremost among those was the appeal to self-interest, without which habitar conservation in particular can never work. No one was likely to strive to prevent the devastation of Australia if Austra lia was in any case not worth having. With his creative use of statistics, his nest turn of plurase, and his encyclopaedic knowledge of the literature. Dr Myers could demonstrate in a relatively painless fashion the ways in which the natural world was, after all, comprehensible in terms of profit and loss in the all-too-b market place, As self-interest is the beating heart of Dr Myer's environmental algebra, so the tropical forest is the basic habitat against which all others must be measured. It is the superlative: the oldest, densest, and richest of habitats; also the most delicate, threatened, and

In the words of the master. tropical forests are "a powerhouse of evolution . a kind of beachmark for life processes."

They are so rich in species that if, for example, "the reader were to go into a tract of forest with a net be would need only a few hours to catch an insect not yet known to ce, he could even name it after "Thus the biological role of tropical forests as a primary source of new animals and plants." The value of those them not yet even discovered, is them not yet even discovered, is immense. In pharmstending products alone, the author estimates "there is roughly one chance in four that the product we purchase, whether by prescription or not, owes its origin, in some way or another, to plants and animals of the tropical forest". Similar generalizations apply to food production and to virtually every industrial category.

One of the author's more notorious estimates is that continued destruction of the tropical forests at present rates could lead to the extinction of a million species by the end of the century, speces by the end at the centrary, to say nothing of the havoc wrought on global climate and geography however remote in place from the "primary sources".

There are alternatives to such an unprecedented "spann of contents," and D. Muser could an unprecedented "spasm of extinction", and Dr Myers spells out a few. One might begin with a scientific crash programme to identify, catalogue, and study as many tropical furest species as possible before they have disap-

Even so ambitious a project would cost, the author notes characteristically, "the equivalent of ten minutes" spending on or ten minutes' spending on armements, or the equivalent of what American each month to cover the costs of stray dogs".

Stock Exchange looks to the individual

The powerful lobby on the Stock Exchange Council in favour of a modified version of the present system of personal membership of the market after the big bang' is winning the day.

The Council is due to publish new draft rules on membership before the end of the year and these are now almost certain to opt for a system of individual nominations as the best way of providing the market's membership rather than the system of corporate seats most commonly used by overseas exchanges.

The decision will cause consternation among banks and other companies that have bought into Stock Exchange firms in the belief they will eventually be allowed to take full control of those firms and the exchange. It could also be seen as unfriendly towards American and Japanese stockbroking firms.

But the emerging consensus within the Council is that personal membership provides the best way of regulating the market. Before 1970, the Stock Exchange used to operate a system of nominations and it is intended to revive this. Anyone interested in becoming a member of the Exchange would have to purchase the right of nomination from an existing member or from the Stock Exchange. Stock Exchange forms would be required to hold a set number of nominations according to their size. So newly created firms coming into the market would have to buy nominations either from members wishing to retire or from the Exchange itself. In addition, newly created firms will have to pay a higher rate of the Stock Exchange tax, the "charge for general services," though this will leave entry costs lower than for many overseas exchanges.

A system of individual nominations will mean that in many importnat respects 100 per cent owners of stock exchange firms will not have full control ofer those firms. Stock Exchange members will be answerable to a higher authority.

Mr Robin Hutton, director general of the Accepting Houses Committee and a member of the Stock Exchange liaison committee, said: "This system is certainly workable but is is not the one we would prefer. The Stock Exchange seems to think it is in a stronger position than it actually is. Nobody has to use the Stock Exchange to trade securities and if the terms of entry are incorrect, they wil do their trading elsewhere".

Supervising the building societies

The Treasury, despite reported misgivings Johnson Matthey affair, appears to be prepared to hand over the role of building society supervision to the Bank.

Mr Ian Stewart, the Economic Secretary to the Treasury, addressed himself yesterday to the loose ends remaining after the publication of, and responses to, the Government's green paper on building societies.

The precise nature of building society supervision in the new era has been one of those loose ends. Mr Stewart, while arguing that the present system of supervision may be adequate for some time ahead, looked towards the day when building societies will be supervised as banks, and under the same supervisory authority. Unless the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies is planning to diversify into banking supervision, this can only mean the Bank of England.

Building societies are less concerned by who is doing the supervising than what the supervisors will be focusing on. This, in the view of the Building Societies'

Association, should mean the quality of assets, the riskiness of the business and the quality of management.

The BSA is pleased by what appears to be a softening of the evident distaste green paper line for the idea of societies being allowed to expand onto the Continent. Mr Stewart said that more interest had been shown in this than the Treasury had expected, and that it was being considered sympathetically.

Sinking feeling for 'Chunnel' lobby

One passing reference at an evening banquet: the Channel tunnel lobbyists have hardly had the kind of ringing endorsement from President Mitterrand's state visit this week that they must have been wishing for. The "Chunnel" was not even on the agenda of President Mitterrand's talks with Mrs Thatcher, according to Downing Street, and the renewed enthusiasm which is said to be shown for the project by a number of Cabinet ministers has yet to reach the surface, if it is there at all.

It is hard to avoid the conclusion that for the moment at least - the lobbyists' attempts to build up a new head of steam behind their pet project are running ahead of events. Sir Nigel Broackes, the chairman of Trafalgar House, seems to be taking a similar view: he says he is willing to take over from Mr Ian MacGregor as the chairman of the Euroroute consortium (in which Trafalgar has a slice of the action) as soon as the Government shows some sign of taking a more positive interest. As of yesterday, he had not taken up the reins.

The British Government has made its own position clear - there will be no financial guarantees. It says it is now up to the consortiums to prove their schemes can go ahead on that basis. The bankers and financiers, meanwile, need to know what the political treaty is likely to say before they can promise to deliver the cash. The French and British governments have to talk to each other.

The one sure conclusion is that there will be no commitment to Channel tunnel for a while yet.

Limp last word from Dunlop

The lengthy statement which Sir Maurice Hodeson, chairman of Dunlop Holdings, delivered on Wednesday was clearly intended to be the final word on the embarrasing dispute over whether the American chief executive of his chosing encouraging inflation outlook. should run the company or whether he should hand over the reins to Sir Michael Edwardes.

Sir Maurice was right to make his statement, but he is wrong to expect the matter to be laid quietly to rest while the banks and the board try to extricate themselves from the unfortunate position they have got themselves into. It cannot stressed often enough that the important thing for Dunlop, its employees and its shareholders is for the capital reconstruction to be agreed and put in

Questions of pride and personality should not be allowed to overshadow this simple but all-important fact.

The responsibility for the delay in reaching agreement now seems to lie with the banks. Sir Maurice sounded uncharacteristically defeatist when he said: "There is really nothing more the company can do." If this is the case, then it does not inspire hopes for an immediate solution to the problems.

Maxwell sparks bitter fight with £43m Waddington bid By William Kay, City Editor

Mr Robert Maxwell the publishing millionaire, yesterday sparked off a City controversy when he made a renewed £43m takeover bid for John Waddington, the Monopoly, and playing cards group.

The bid, from Mr Maxwell's British Printing and Communication Corporation, is a straight 500p a share cash offer, although a convertible loan stock is being put together as an alternative. On the news, Waddington shares leaped from 463p to 535p before settling at 525p. A bitter light is in prospect.

The controversy concerns pegotiations which have been taking place for the past few weeks over Mr Maxwell's 23 per cent stake in Waddington, held through his private company. Pergamon Press. Mr Maxwell had said he wanted to sell it and Kleinwort Benson. the merchant bank acting for Waddington, was offering to buy it and place the shares with other investors. It is common ground that Kleinwort offered 390p a share and on Monday of this week raised to 410p. The next day they withdrew the offer alto-

Mr Maxwell said yesterday: "Nonsense. They could have set a deadline for us to reply. That is the traditional way to negotiate. My advisers feared that kleinwort withdrew because Waddington was about to make a bid for another company which would have further diluted our percentage holding. So we acted". Waddington deales any such intention. But Kleinwort has failed in what was its highest priority, to prevent Mr Maxwell renewing his seige of Waddiagton. Last year his £13m offer was narrowly defeated.

The latest bid is worth £43m because Waddington's equity has been enlarged by a rights issue and it has performed better. In the year to March, profits recovered from £162,000 to £3.4m. Mr Maxwell's advisers think £4.5m is possible this year and interim figures are due pext month. Mr Maxwell said: "They have pulled their socks up and

INDUSTRY TODAY

The cost of spreading Telecom shares

By Jonathan Davis

The largest share offering the world has ever seen enters its final phase today after lengthy - and costly – preparations

It is always pleasant for governments when reality sudcal rentoric. If the polisters and market researchers are right, something happy of this sort could be about to happen with the privatization of British Telecom, the great and much vaunted multi-billion pound share sale, which will formally kick off today after nearly three years of intensive and innovalive preparations.

Sir George Jefferson, the chairman of BT, will start the final phase of what is, by a factor of five, the largest share offering the world has ever seen, at a press conference this morning. It will be accompanied by the publication of a draft or "pathfinder" prospectus, a hefty document of at least 50 pages which will give all the relevant and statutory information about the impending sale, except the final price at which the shares are being sold. This document - which will confirm that 51 per cent of the shares in BT are being sold will then form the basis of a final intensive three-week selling campaign. This will culminate in the pricing and underwriting of the offer by City banks and investment institutions on around November 15. Members of the public will then have until around November 28 to apply for

By then BT will have become a private sector corporation: with an estimated market trying with BP for the title of Stock Exchange, accounting for six per cent of the stock market's total value.

Inevitably, the scale of the response from the general public will attract most attention - and looks like providing the Government with something of a political bonus. The effort to use the BT floration as a platform for achieving a "quantum leap" in wider share denly starts to catch up with the ownership in this country bolder flourishes of their politi- appears to have been far more successful than anybody in Whitehall originally dared to

> The tracking surveys of public response to huge advertising campaign about the BT share sale which have been running since last month show that three quarters of the adult impending flotation - and that one in four (about 12 million people) say they are interested in buying shares.

These claims need to be treated with caution. Nevertheless, they are amply supported by anecdotal evidence. No Whitchall official is prepared to say what kind of public repsonse the Government is looking for, beyond expressing the hope that BT will end up with more stockholders than the 350,000 who own shares in ICl. Excluding employee shareholders, only 1.2 million ocople own shares in Britain at the moment, a total that has been steadily declining for years.

The Government must be

350.000. however. Provisions have been made to print two million prospectuses for distribution to the public, and the Treasury has shown surprising even astonishing - largesse in the spending it has been prepared to sanction for the marketing and promotion campaign behind the issue.

The drive to attract as wide a of innovative features, all of them costing money. The one that has attracted most attention has been the decision to give telephone subscribers, who buy shares, rebates on their telephone bills. If they buy enough shares, subscribers can qualify for up to twelve £18 rebates, spread over a number of years.

The cost will be borne by the Government, British Telecom itself having refused to do so. Since the number who opt for this course is unknown it occasions when the Treasury has been known to write an open cheque. If 500,000 subhoping for a response that is scribers go for rebates, it will cost the Treasury £9m immediately, with more to come. The advertising campaign on television and in the newspapers is also something of a first. No private sector share offer has been advertised in this way - and certainly not on such

In the BT share issue where the need to spread awareness of the impending sale has been the the largest company on the response from the public as first imperative, this has not

Kleinwort. Benson, the lead merchant bank handling the issue for the Government, has been instrumental in another unprecedented move for a public share offering. This has been the decision to try to reach the general (non-shareowning) public through the people they normally turn to for financial advice: their bank manager, accountant or solicitor.

Along with the regional stockbrokers who are handling the main marketing drive outside London, these so-called financial intermediates" will be paid a commission - up to two per cent in some cases - on the value of shares which their clients apply for through them. This is one decision which is known to have caused some qualms in Whitehall.

privatization issues - be the cost of having the issue underwritten by City banks and finance. He succeeds Mr G. E investment institutions.

The need to guarantee that 51 per cent of BT's shares will be actually sold next month (and therefore ensure that it is taken out of the public sector) means that there was never any doubt that the BT sale would be underwritten, despite the huge cost and criticism from the Public Accounts Committee in the past that the money spent was wasted.

The underwriting will be handled differently, however, with half the shares on offer being firmly "placed" with the underwriting institutions and only the balance being contingent on the general reponse of the issue.

Another small tranche of the issue will be temporarily under-written by the Bank of England until the shares reserved for overseas investors - probably 10 to 15 per cent of the issue are underwritten in New York, Toronto and Tokyo.

The political success of the issue has become the Government's paramount concern, to the point where Whitchall officials concede that the pricing of the shares will be less rigorous than it could be.

Having gone to such extreme lengths to attract those who have never owned shares before, it would be a public relations disaster if the shares were to take a sudden dive after Ouite whether the price foregone should be counted as a cost of the issue is a moot point. The decision to go for wide share ownership has undoubted ideological attractions for the Government, but it has had practical effects as well. One of these has been that it looks like avoiding the worst outcome the carlier this year looked like facing that of being faced with a "buyer's strike" in the City with The biggest single item in the the institutions using their

Extracts from the Statement to Shareholders by the Chairman, Sir Austin Bide:

"The accounts for this year, 1983/84, record further success for your Group. "Sales and profits are both significantly higher than those for the preceding year. Group sales, excluding Vestric Ltd, amounted to £914 million. an increase of £207 million. Of this increase, some £190 million was contributed by our pharmaceutical activity — by far the most important part of our business. The Group's profits, before tax, were £256 million, an increase of nearly £70 million.

"Our company in the U.S.A. produced sales of £147 million compared with £33 million the year before, and this was the result, mainly but by no means wholly, of its successful introduction of ranitidine, the Group's new anti-ulcer medicine.

"Ranitidine has now become our biggest selling product, having overtaken our anti-asthmatic medicine salbutamol. Ranitidine sales are still growing fast in all its markets and we expect it to be introduced into the two remaining major markets, France and Japan, in the next few months.

"One of our newest products is ceftazidime, an important injectable cephalosporin antibiotic. We introduced it this year into the U.K., Germany and Italy, and the preliminary results are very encouraging. We are planning to introduce it into other markets, including the U.S.A., during the course of the current financial year.

"I am glad to report some progress in the fields of animal health, foods and proprietary medicines, but Vestric Ltd., our U.K. wholesaling subsidiary, and Matburn Holdings Ltd., our surgical equipment company, are facing problems in very difficult market conditions. "Most of the amount invested in fixed assets during 1983/84 was used to expand and improve our manufacturing resources throughout the world, particularly in the U.K., U.S.A., and Italy. With important products at the

ICI coasts towards £1bn profit mark

The best thing that could happen to the ICI share price would appear to be for the much mooted downturn in the chemical cycle to take place. The expected time of arrival keeps being put back and mid-

1985 is now the popular date. Until there is some tangible evidence of how ICI can cope with the pressures of the downturn in its rationalized and restructured form the stock market is not prepared to afford the shares the re-rating which they deserve, This reluctance to trust a company which came badly unstuck in the recession of 1980 is understandable, but [C] has taken a lot of trouble to reduce its exposure to cyclical problems.

The company is not going out of its way to give any indication that the downturn is on its way. Yesterday's pretax profits for the third quarter were £248m, at the top end of expectations.

The running total for the nine months to date is now £780m, against £445m in 1983 and the company is comfortably in line to top £1 billion this year.

There is no doubt that ICI has benefitted substantially from the weakness of sterlig and this has boosted profits by about £20m so far. This aside the underlying trading still remains strong and while growth may be slowing down it s not falling away.

The pharmaceutical and agriculture dvisions have performed well, but it is the fibres, petrochemicals and plastics division which are perhaps the unsung heroes. The progress here is largely due to the benefits of cost cutting and rationalization and it offers a firm indication that ICI will weather the downturn, when it come, more successfully than in the past.

The shares closed up 6p at 676p. They have had a good run, although with US interest still quite high there might be a little more to go for in the short term. The longer term impliimportant Woe betide the fund manager who does not have any iCi

It has been a good week for the fund managers, Ivory & Sime, of Edinburgh's Charlotte Square.

The group revealed on Monday that Japan Assets, its Nippon investment trust, had scored a 43 per cent jump in net asset value to 66p in the year to September 30. About £5.4m accrued from marketcurrency movements of the £6m iumo in assets to £19.8m.

But the deal surrounding British Assets, the largest and highly geriatric trust in the stable, sound equally sophisti-cated. Since 1974, BA has been run for income growth from an overseas portfolio, mainly in North America.

Since 1974, the growth rate has been a cheery 24 per cent, and the trust celebrates 10 years of changed identity with a bonus 1.5p payment.

Yet paradoxically, British Assets has secured the bulk of its assets growth via the stake in GBC Capital, a Torontobased trust run by Pembroke Management, which has concentrated, with huge success so far on United States high technology stocks. In 10 years, assets have grown 10-fold.

Hence, the GBC stake now dominates the Assets portfolio. with little income benefit. But instead of top-slicing the bolding, the Assets team is offering shareholders a way into the trust via a rights issue, and also arranging a London quote for GBC.

This is roughly the route Atlantic Assets used to float off Ivory & Sime initially.

Hence a stake in British Assets offers an easy way into a successful North American trust. Only the terms of the rights have still to be decided. But the word is that they will be highly attractive. The shares closed 5p ahead yesterday at

Etam It was perhaps just as well that Etam, the womenswear re-tailer, did not make a profits forecast when it was floated on the Stock Exchange last June. Over the last two and a half months a considerable number of the group's stores in the North of England and in Scotland - perhaps as many as

30 - have begun to fall short of budget and one or two are showing a decline in volume Etam is always attempting to find fault with itself. But in this instance the fault probably lies with the miners' strike and a ment in the North rather than in any fundamental management or fashion problem. Nor should the effect of these budget shortfalls be seen out of proportion. Etam is still doing exceptionally well by any standards.

In the 32 weeks to September 8, pretax profits rose 35 per cent from £2.3m to £3.1m and the company is confident that it will continue to grow steadily.

With no prospectus forecast to judge the figures by, the stock market seemed pleased and the shares added 5p to

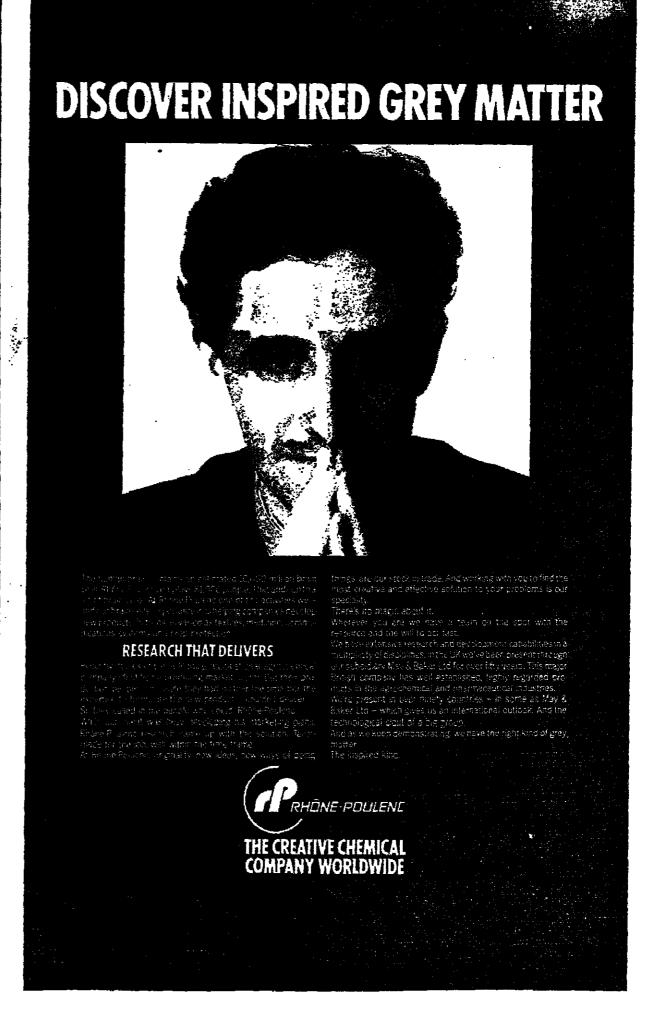

Despite a growing cash surplus, which must by now be more than £9m, the group is limiting its ambitions for the next three to four years to expanding the Etam chain from the present 98 to about

Nor is the group planning to broaden Etam's customer appeal from the present narrow target range of 20 to 25 year olds in the CI, C2 and C3 social groups.

So the cash mountain will presumably continue to grow into the indefinite future even if the group pursues further its expensive policy of buying in freeholds where ever possible. The shares continue to represent reasonable value.

Secretary of State for Defence and Another v Guardian, News-Dapers Ltd

Before Lord Diplock, Lord Fraser of Tullybelton, Lord Scarman, Lord Roskill and Lord Bridge of Harwich [Speeches sold October 25]
Section 10 of the Contempt of Court Act 1981 was to be given a wide construction and its general ban upon a court requiring disclosure of sources of information was subject only to the four exceptions in the section - the interests of justice or national security or the prevention of disorder or crime.

Accordingly the section could defeat an owner's claim to recover his own property; and it was sufficient to attract the protection of the section that the order could, though not necessarily would have the effect of disclosing the source of

The House of Lords so held unanimously but were divided on the question whether, on the evidence before it, the Court of Appeal had been correct in holding that the interests of national security had required that identity of the person who had disclosed to The Gitardian a memorandum of the Secretary of State for Defence entitled Deliveries of Cruise Missiles to RAF Greenham Common - Parliamentary and Public Statements" and classified "secret" should be established forthwith and that section 10 had afforded the

The majority (Lord Diplock, Lord Roskill and Lord Bridge) held that national security had required delivery up of the document to activery up of the document to assist in the identification of the civil servant who had disclosed the document. and Mr Justice Scott.
Following the Court of Appeal's dismissat of Guardian Newspapers Ltd's appeal (The Times December 17, 1983; [1984] 2 WLR 268) from Mr Justice Scott's order (The Times December 16, 1984) that they should return to the Secretary of State for Defence and the Attorney General a photostatic copy of the General a photostatic copy of the document, examination of it had enabled the civil servant responsible for its anonymous delivery to The Guardian to be identified as a clerk Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Miss Sarah

The House of Lords dismissed Guardian Newspapers' appeal but directed that there should be no

Contempt Act can defeat owner's claim to his property

Mr Sydney Kentridge, QC and Mr Peter Prescott for Guardian Newspapers, Mr Simon D. Brown and Mr John Mummery for the LORD DIPLOCK said that section 10 was concerned solely with the power of a court of justice (or any other body, exercising the judicial power of the state) to order person to disclose the source of nformation contained in a publication for which he was responsible: a power which was exercisable only where the identity or nature of such sources was relevant to some issue that fell to be determined by the court in the particular proceedings.

Unlike the old "newspaper rule" at common law (BSC r Granada TV Ltd ([1981] AC 1096, 1197-99)), it was not limited to disclosure upon discovery where disobedience to the order for discovery would fall into the category of a civil contempt; it applied also to disclosure in response to a question put to a witness at the trial, where a refusal to asswer a question if ordered to by the judge would constitute a criminal contempt.
Section 10 recognised the existence of a prima facie right of ordinary members of the public to be informed of any matter that anyone thought it appropriate to communicate to them as such, although that did not extend to that nformation's source.

The choice of what information should be communicated to the public lay with the publisher alone; it was not confined to matters of "public interest". Provided it was addressed to the public at large or any section of it, every publication of information fell within the section and was entitled to its protection unless the publication fell ithin one of the general exceptions introduced by the word "unless".

Section 10 was in no way qualified by the nature of the judicial proceedings, or the claim or cause of action in respect of which such judicial proceedings were brought. His Lordship was unable to accept Mr Justice Scott's construction of the section as being inapplicable to a claim, for the detention of goods in which an order for the delivery of the goods was sought under section 3 (2) (a) of the Torts (Interference with Goods) Act 1977. Nor did he share Lord il applied to anything other than an order of a court which in terms directed disclosure of the source by oral evidence or affidavit compel him to reveal a source of information. If he could show that security or for the prevention of there was a reasonable chance that it would do so, then (subject to the exceptions in the section) that would suffice to bring the prohibition into effect.

His Lordship was in full agreement with the judgment of Lord Justice Griffiths where he said that he saw no harm in giving a wide that he saw no harm in giving a wide construction to the opening words because in the latter part of the because in the tanter part of the section the court was given ample powers to order the source to be revealed where in the circumstances of a particular case the wider public rest made it necessary to do so.

interest made it necessary to do so.

There were only four interests singled out for protection: justice, national security, the prevention of disorder and of crime.

The exceptions included, no reference to "the public interest" generally, and the expression "justice", the interests of which were entitled to protection, was not used in a general sense as the antonym of "injustice" but in the atministration of justice in the course of legal proceedings in a court of law.

tration of justice in the course of legal proceedings in a court of law.

The onus of proving one of the exceptions lay on the party by whom the order was sought. Expediency, however great, was not enough; section 10 required actual necessity to be established to the satisfaction of the court.

It was difficult to envisage a civil action in which section 10 would be relevant other than for defamilion or detention of goods where, as in the present case, the goods consisted of documents supplied to the media in breach of confidence.

The instant case did not provide a

The instant case did not provide a convenient occasion to say anything about the effect of section 10 on actions for defamation. As respects actions for the detention of documents, the section did not destroy the cause of action or affect its nature; what it did was to affect what interlocutory, orders could be made by the court in the action, what questions witnesses might be compelled to answer and what documents they might be required to produce at the actual trial, and what relief under the 1977. Act might be granted by the judgment

Where the predominant purpose of the action was to obtain possession of a document in order to find out from examining it the identity of the source, of information, section 10 would be a matter that the judge would be required to take into consideration in deciding how to exercise his in deciding how to exercise his discretion under section 3(3)(b) of the 1977 Act.

Unless he found as a fact that the delivery up of the document itself. In any such case the intrinsic cation had to estators that it compliance would (not just might) compel him to reveal a source of information. If he could show that there was a reasonable chance that it would do so, then (subject to the quite different considerations applied.

The affidavit evidence before the Court of Appeal referred to the subject matter of the leaked document, the deployment of nuclear missiles in the United Kingdom, which was vitally concerned with an aspect of national security: Security:
Although elliptically expressed, it made it clear that the risk to national security that the Govern-ment feared lay not in the publication of the particular document but in the possibility and in so potentially catastrophic a field as nuclear warfare his Lordship regarded possibility as enough -- that ever leaked that document might leak in future other classified documents disclosure of which would have much more serious consequences on national security.

That was an inference which common sense alone would justify ally judge in drawing. It was now known, as the Government did not at the time of the interlocutory proceedings, but the editor of The Guardian did, that that was no mere possibility, it was a reality.

Miss Tisdall had in fact already leaked another document dealing. leaked another document dealing with contingency security arrangements, which must have, been of considerably greater significance to national security, but which the editor of The Guardian, with a sense of responsibility that he had shown throughout the whole affair; not only refrained from publishing, but arranged for it and all copies in the newspaper's possession to be destroyed.

The evidential material before the Court of Appeal had been sufficient to establish that immediate delivery up of the document was necessary in the interests of national security. The appeal should be dismissed.

LORD FRASER agreed that section 10 should be given the wider construction which appealed to Lord Justice Griffiths, and that the appellants were not precluded from relying on the section by the mere fact that they were doing so in answer to a proprietary claim from the respondents for the delivery of their own property.

The only evidence in support of the Crown's case that was before the judge at the interlocutory stage had been in the affidavit sworn by the case fell within one of the four judge at the interlocutory stage had exceptions in section 10, he should been in the affidavit sworn by the not give judgment in a form that principal establishment, officer of granted relief under section 3(2)(a) the Ministry of Defence to the effect of the 1977 Act which compelled that the continuance in office of the to secret documents was a threat to which it would be necessary in the interests of justice to order delivery, up of the document.

However, in the instant appeal what was relied upon was not the interests of justice but those of national security. To those interests on by itself enough to satisfy was not by itself enough to satisfy was not by itself enough to satisfy the court that disclosure of that person's not by itself enough to satisfy the court that disclosure of that person's identity by the publisher of the information was necessary in the interests of national security. There could have been other means of establishing it, and, unless special urgency was proved, the requirements of section 10 were not met merely by showing that the easiest way of identifying the person was by calling upon the publisher of the information to disclose it. The court required evidence and not mere assumption. The test of necessity was a strict one that ought not to be whittled away by reading the section as if it said "necessary or convenient" or "necessary and convenient". The Court of Appeal had given insufficient weight to the lest of necessity. There was a danger of relying on inference which might have seemed reasonable at the time but which could in fact be unsound. The affidavit had also made a bare assection that the leak represented a threat to the United Kingdom's relations with its allies. It was easy to see how that was a nt was easy to see now that was a possibility, at least in theory, but his Lordship did not see how a court was in a position to judge the reality or seriousness of the risk without some evidence.

Subsequent events had shown that the untrustworthy servant represented a serious security risk, and it is probable that, even when the matter was before the judge evidence could have been put before evidence could have been put him on which he might have concluded that disclosure was

That was uncertain, and specuinto was a finitless exercise, but the practical conclusion was that the affidavit evidence ought to have been presented in sufficient detail to enable the judge to come to a decision upon proper evidence. The appeal should be allowed.

LORD SCARMAN, agreeing with Lord Fraser, said that the House was agreed that section 10 should have a wide and generous application. Since it was, in the words of Lord Justice Griffiths, "in the interests of us all that we should have a truly effective press", rights of property had to yield pride of place to the national interest Parliament must have had in mind when enacting the section.

There certainly remained a place in the law for the principle that the courts must be slow to impute to Parliament an intention to override property rights in the absence of plain words to that effect. But the principle was not an overriding rule of law, but an aid, among others, developed by judges in their task of interpreting statutes.

Lord Justice Slade had thought it sought the protection of the section had to prove that the order would result in disclosure. The point was relevant in the present case because The Guardian did not know the identity of the source, nor whether the photocopy, if delivered up, would reveal the source. The point was, however, no more than a question of evidence, the appropriate standard of proof being the balance of probabilities.

The evidence adduced by the Crown in the present case had fallen far short of what was needed to establish that disclosure of the source of information was necessary in the interests of national security. They had relied on the affidavil of Mr Hastie-Smith, the principal establishment officer at the Ministry of Defence. He had "certain responsibilities" concerned with the security of records and other documents of his department.

undefined responsibilities any clue as to whether he was in a position to make a judgment on questions of national security. But if he was, his affidavit was stronger in assertion than in argument.

He made two assertions: first, the fact that the document "found its way into the possession of a national newspaper is of the gravest importance to the continued maintenance of national security". That assertion appeared to rest on the document being classified as "secret", its limited circulation, its contents being "concerned with a matter of great significance in relation to the defence of the United Kingdom and Nato", and on the breach of confidentiality owed to the Crown.

But Mr Hastie-Smith offered no

but Mr. Flastic-Smith offered no collightenment as to the criteria used when classifying documents as secret nor by whom or upon what grounds such classification was made. Was it to be assumed that no documents other than those con-cerned with national security were ever classified as secret? The Crown had now conceded that the contents of the memorandum were so far as related to national security inno-

Equally it by no means followed that because a document was restricted to a limited high level circulation its "leak" to a national newspaper would constitute a risk to national security. There would be many documents dealing with parliamentary, political and other matters unconnected with national security which a government would wish to be confined to the eyes of a few in high places.

Finally, there was clearly a breach of trust by a Crown employee, But serious though a breach of trust by a Crown servant was, it did not necessarily follow that national security had been endangered. The circumstances and subject matter of the breach were what mattered in arguable that the publisher who disclosure represented a threat to the security system was such that it

But the evidence of danger to the security system was meagre and full of omissions. One did not know, because Mr Hastie-Smith had not said, whether the memorandum was filed or processed in the same system as sensitive defence docu-ments or with parliamentary or other political material.

If there was a failure of procedures designed to protect national security, some explanation of the procedure and their application to the innocuous document should have been forthcoming. The Court of Appeal thought the link "blindingly obvi-

His Lordship did not; nor did Mr Justice Scott. It was no part of the judge's function to use his common sense in an attempt to fill a gap which could only be filled only by

Common sense as a substitute for factual information was a dangerous weapon at any time. Most assuredly it was no foundation for the establishment of a matter of fact to the satisfaction of the court. And it was the court which had to be extinged.

Two further matters called for comment. The first was the view of the Court of Appeal that there was a need for urgency in countering the threat to national security; hence their hearing of the appeal on the afternoon of the morning that Mr Justice Scott gave judgment, and their giving judgment the pext day.

His Lordship was torn between admiration for their speed and apprehension lest in the rush justice suffered. However, there was in the conduct of the Crown nothing to conduct of the Crown nothing to suggest any urgency.

Twelve days elapsed before action was taken to recover it, which time, it was suggested – but without any evidence – had been spent on internal inquiries. If they were, the court should have been told so in evidence and whether they achieved any success.

Finally, the appellants had submitted that disclosure of a source of information by a newspaper could not be shown to be necessary unless there was evidence that other inquiries which could was not that of a school mistress to reasonably be expected to have been made, had been made and had proved fruitless.

That submission went too far, although such evidence was very relevant to the issue of necessity for disclosure.

The appeal should be allowed.

The essential point was that all the evidence pointed to the offender, be his or her position high or low, as someone with access to information affecting national security, and someone who could not properly be trusted with that information.

The appeal should be dismissed.

LORD BRIDGE, agreeing with Lord Diplock and Lord Roskill, said that he agreed that section 10 could apply to defeat an owner's claim to apply to defeat an owner's claim to recover his own property, and that it was audicient: to attract the protection of the section that the order of the court could, though not necessarily would, have the effect of disclosing a source of information.

There was no ambiguity in the phrase "necessary in the interests of national security". Whether such a necessity was established by the evidence was a question of fact which would depend on the evidence in the particular case.

In the present case the question was not resolved merely by the fact that the evidence fell short of the standard of particularity that was desirable.

standard of particularity that was desirable.
On the question of urgency, it was unthinfiable, that the Government should have embarised on the present litigation without taking the elementary step of an internal inquiry. Assuming that, and taking judicial: notice of the fact that important decisions in Government were racely taken without time-consuming consultation and deliberation, his Lordship could set nothing in the lapse of 12 days to nothing in the lapse of 12 days to show that the identification of the

Mexico chips are in the bag Roger McKechnie recalls bow h took the plan for the company on several handwritten shoets of paper to discuss it with British Steel Industry, which promotes new business in old steel areas. After four hours of deliberation approval was given. From the idea in April 1981 it took many months to identify products and sort out a financial package. The directors had no capital apart from their own houses and between them could only raise £47,000. British Steel Industry gave £30,000 plus what McKechnie calls handholding moral support. In return for a 27 per cent shareholding ICFC provided £16,000 and leased them the machinery.

Barclays Bank came in with a royalty-based start-up loan of £50,000. The clincher was selective financial assistance from the Department of Trade which provided £105,000.

Product ideas were reduced to 15 aged 43, was a European vice president of advertising agents F.C.B. International. He is marketing director of the new company. They have geared their business to-supplying all sectors of the catering industry, and Mrs Bailey added: Professional caterers are aware of the high standards required in their establishments and tableware falls into this category." Will caterers ever go into disposables rather than linen? It is happening now, slowly but surely", she said.

Linen's share of the tableware market is gradually being eroded by good-quality disposable products. The market is there, the Baileys contend, because caterers of all types are having to become more cost-effective whilst maintaining their own cus-tomer appeal. Mrs Bailey added: Linen has to be laundered and ironed and the slightest stain or hole from, say, a cigarette, means replacement. Decor needs none of this."

Far to frequently banks and finance houses lend to the new small business against the value of property involved as collateral and not the potential of the BRIEFING business. The result is that small businesses are started without the management, skills or often the right level of financial backing. This view comes from John White who Judging by the remarks made by the Australian coach after his side had lost to Cardiff on Wednesday, he is still not too clear. Understand-ably, he felt aggrieved that the penalty count should have swing so completely. By my count the Australians conceded 10 penalties in the first half and received five. In the second half they conceded two and received 15, which is a dramatic imbalance.

Few teams have it within them to change the nature of their game during the course of 80 minutes but the basic difficulty is that Australian players are uncertain what they may or may not do on the what they may or may not do on the ground because, like South African players, they play much more frequently on hard surfaces where the ball bounces about and encourages greater fluidity. Fqually, any well-organized British side, knowing how their visitors play and how the fitness of the touring side - especially one from Australia - is likely to tell in the final quarter, will emphasize the close-quarters area of their game and deliberately stop the other side from playing last and loose.

In doing so they will concede penalties, as Cardiff did, but if they make sure that most of them are well away from their own posts, little harm may come of it. If you have Gareth Davies to kick you back down field, you are laughing. The grounds and the weather are unlikely to change for the Austra-hans. They will, if anything, get worse; therefore the likelihood of their superior handling skills being offset by wind and rain becomes greater. They will have to organize their back row to play a British

Mystery of Davies

After his performance against the elevated his standing in the eyes of After his performance against the Australians on Wednesday, there should be no doubt that Gareth Davies is the best stand-off half currently playing in Wales, and perhaps even in the British Isles. However, for those who matter he is, ridiculously, no more than fifth in the off current of the period of him his off current of the period of him his line of the period of him. "I have had a word with the selectors and they maintain that I am not included because I don't tackle." he seid. "I don't entirely agree with that. Be that as it may. I believe that a stand-off half is of more value to his team if he can stay in his teat than he consider in the in line of succession. Ahead of him in the eyes of the Welsh selectors are Malcolm Dacey (Swansea), Geraint John (South Glamorgan Institute), Jonathan Davies (Neath), and Paul on his feet than he caught in the Turner (Newbridge). SHAME WILLIAM

Pom-teaser for whom the word is a stage

A seven-footer can dominate in line-out just by being there. Alan Jones, the couch of the touring Australian rugby party, has the same effect on press conferences, He is not a laconic man. At the inquisition after the first match, one rouby journalist was curious enough ragey journant was curtous enough to ask the towering, silent captain, Steve Williams, where his own responsibilities began. Williams stirred loto life: "About three minutes before we get on the pitch."

it was pleasant to see Jones even mildly disconcerted by this; in a couple of minutes's bluster be tried to explain that it was joke, that the party was really a kind of workers' cuoperative. This didn't however, have the ring of total truthfulness.

For Jones is a powerhouse of ambition. After he has finished the lengths, 10-week tour of Britain, he will get back to work on the task of heing the next prime minister of Australia. Not that he pure it quite tike that. "I have never hidden the fact that I have political ambitions." he said. He has worked as a speechwriter for Malcolm Fraser, and has writer for "statetim reaser, and nas stood for parliament, "I was offered a safe seat to contest in December. But I had already given my cummitment to the side here, and it would not have been proper to take

Jones might have been custo made to irritate delicate English sensibilities, and that is something no red-blooded Australian can resist. Some Australians like to tense the English by exaggerating all their most brutal Ocker qualities: Dennis Lillee, with such remarks as "there's nothing like a cold tinnic after beating the Poms", was the Patonic ideal of Ockerdom, Others, like Jones, prefer the tease of being prefty damn tough but incredibly smart at the same time. If you really want to rile the Poms, tear the ring-pull off your Swan lager and start talking about art and theatre. "I'm not out to upset any one," said Jones, "but I'm not about to cust myself as a bumbling introvert." "There is always a special competitiveness when England and Australia meet. It's like parents and children. Australia is an outstanding place as regards international events: it has some outstanding events: it has some outstanding achievements in theatre, art and sport. And it can teach the parent a thing or two about rugby. The home country, England, is always amazed precocuse.

The Jones philosophy is both hairy-chested and high-minded:
"People who say they only play sport for fun are people who are frightened of losing. Winning is important – why else do you keep a senre? To suppost that sport is only score? To suggest that sport is only for fun is to suggest that excellence

To say that it's all just fun, that we don't care too much either way that is doing a disservice to the

He wants a side full of ruthlessly decent blokes, "It is possible to have civilized rugby. It is up to those in charge of the young men not to allow the animalistic spirit to dominate." he said, not totally unpompously.

Jones wants his band of highly intelligent young men" to win, but as importantly, not to whine in defeat. "There will be problems, but no cycuses. We're not to complain and apologize in pursuit of victors."

Being a politically-minded fellow, Jones perhaps allows himself a certain flexibility in such matters. After the Australians' defeat by Cardiff on Wednesday, he summed up: "I haven't seen that sort of persistent attack on one team by the

The side has yet to flicker into life, but this is a long tour. Against the single-minded mediucrity of the London Division side, in their first match of the tour, there were outbreaks of genuine brilliance. "Australians love risk-taking, love adventure. This generates skills that are not evident elsewhere. An Australian loves the sense of a gamble. But English rugby tends to be dour, grafting and conservative." Australia interesting: England boring. Hmm.

Australian gentleman, and a more than determined talker. "He talks a good lour" is the normal verdict: the implication is that judgment must be suspended until we have a few results to work on. But Jones is not a loud of the base of the long of t Nubammed Ali kind of talker, he is a politician, a lender-of-men kind of

"My leadership style is based on respect for individualities. We're not always mates, I'm not a popularity seeker. I train tough, but the words get left behind in the paddock. The most important thing is to demon-strate your own standards. All leadership should do that."
And leadership is what it is all about. Jones is a man who loves to be in charge, who is reveiling in his position, who is proud of his boys. "One thing I will guarantee: we know how to pick ourselves up. If we fall, we will rise quick."

Kardooni inspires Sherborne victory

The Football Trust and the Sports Council have joined forces to launch a £1.5m scheme to provide football pitches for local authorities in England and Wales. The Football Trust, whose income is generated from spot-the-ball competitions run by three major pools promoters, will offer grants to help pay for the new or improved facilities. Already £4.1m has been handed out by the trust, producing 143 new pitches.

SQUASH RACKETS Main attraction excluded from world masters By Colin McQuillan

The Squash Rackets Association and their sponsors. ICI Perspex, have worked long and hard to make a major specialor event of the annual world masters championannual world masters champion-ships, commencing today at the Spectrum Arena, Warrington. The original conceptof gathering the world's best players on the most advanced transparent courts, at the heart of the game's most enthusi-astic area, has paid off handsomely and encouraged constant develop-ment

It seems tronic, then, that the very rules established by the SRA to prevent dilution of that concept prevent difution of that concept have denied them this year the best possible attraction. Geoff Williams. He has dominated the dometic scene during the past 12 months. A British Open semi-final place, a series of overseas tournament wins and a storming start in the National Premier League, including the scalp of Gawain Briars, yesterday elevated the tall left-hander to joint English No 1, and world No 13.

When the field was drawn. Geoff was ranked fourth in England and 15th in the world, in each case behind Hiddy Jahan, Gawain Briars and Phil Kenyon, the SRA tournament organizer. Andrew Shelley, said. "The rule is, only the one the from any one country can play in the ICI world masters.

Williams would have a good chance of reaching Monday's semi-finals in any of the preliminary round robin day brought John Dunlop within sight of wining his first trainer's championship. With Britain's largest team of over 170 horses in his stables at Arundel, Dunlop has now saddled 84 winners of races worth £494,998. His total is £10,259 below Henry Cecil's tally of £505,527, as the Newmarket trainer bids to claim his fifth title.

In the heaviest going encountered so far this season, Efisio just too strong for Young Runaway in an exciting finish. After Willie Carson had set sail for home over a quarter of a mile out. Greville Starkey produced Young Runaway with a strong challenge entering the last furlong. But as the pair drew five lengths clear of the third horse, Tickly Bender, Efisio held on to his lead to win by half a length.

Geoff Lawson, Guy Har-wood's brother-in-law and assistant trainer, said there were no obvious excuses for Doncaster's Champagne Stakes winner. "We might have done better with a stronger gallop, but we were beaten fair and square", he said. Efisio is now undefeated in our races for Mrs Manuelita Landi, and has shown steadily progressive form throughout the season. The formidable colt was bred by Lady Sarah fan Balding's horses have also struck form with a vengeance recently and the Kingsclere trainer continued on the winning trail by landing the Rochford Thompson Newbury Stakes with River Spey and the Cape Dried Fruit Trophy with Fair Test. Paul Cook excelled himself in his handling of River Spey, who beat Capo di Monte by a neck with Tundra Goose, the favourite, finishing threequarters of a length away in third place.

Bred by her owner, Paul Mellon, the Mill Reef filly was having the first race of her career and is now on offer at 25-1 for the 1,000 Guineas. "The filly's dam, Strathspey, was a good winner for the Queen

Mondanite looked all set for victory when going clear below the distance, but Carson was seen at his most persuasive when forcing Gay Captain into the lead close home to win by a Oaks by finishing runner-up to Shadeed in the Houghton Stakes at Newmarket last week. Carson, Efisio's jockey, had earlier initiated a double by

The other big race news during the afternoon concerned the William Hill November Handicap. After Steve Dawson had persuaded Old Hubert to sprint home four lengths clear Mou colt was having the first race of his career for Sir of Island Mill in the Great Western Stakes, Alan Bailey, his trainer, said that the winner was now firmly on target for the last big handicap of the season. "I cied him a lot at Folkestone last week and even more today. This is the first time that he's had the mud he loves and I thought he was a certainty. Unless the weights go up, Dawson will be in the saddle. But if they are raised, Peter Bloomfield will have the ride."

perfirmances of the season when he turned the Glynwed International turned the Chynwed International Steeplechase into a procession and won by 20 lengths. He is in the field again, only this time he has 12st shoulder whereas last year he carried 15lb less. Now he will be meeting Observe who finished third that day albeit 21 lengths adrift, on 26 lb worse terms. 26 lb worse terms.

Later in the season Observe was to achieve notoriety by becoming John Francome's 1,000th winner. Well that I expect both to run this afternoon, I doubt that either will give this amount of weight to a fit and fapcied Voice Of Progress, who and funcied Veice Of Progress, who proved last season that he comes to hand early by winning his first four races, the first and third of which were at Newbury.

I was particularly impressed by the way that he brushed the smart Duke of Milan saide to win the Hopeful Steeplechase over today's course and distance last November.

trae and distance last November That performance left me with the indelible impression that two-and-a-half miles, which is the distance of today's feature race, could easily be his ideal trip. Sea Merchant, who has made the long journey from Arthur Stephen-son's Bishop Auckland stables, and Iden Green, who will be fitter for his first race of the sesson at Cheltenham a fortnight ago, also seem bound to go well but I am happy to go nap on Voice of David Barons is another trainer Twelve months ago The Mighty with doubly good prospects at Mac put up one of the most exciting Newbury today. The way that with doubly good prospects at Newbury today. The way that Playschool won his first race of the season at Chepstow suggested that he must be followed again in the Seven Barrows Handrap Hurdle. Likewise Statemanship's victory in the Free Handicap Hurdle there on the same afternoon pointed to him being hard to beat in the Flavel-Leisure Four-Year-Old Hurdle even though such accomplished jumpers Afzal, Broad Beam and Spritebrand are in oppos

Stan Mellor is currently doing well with his young hurdlers, and following that promising run at Cheltenham I expect Whisky Eyes to keep the pot boiling by winning the Falcon Catering Equipment Novices Hurdle.

At Doncaster the highlight will not so much be round four of the European Apprentice Champion-ship but Provideo's attempt to win the Doncaster Stakes and so record his fifteenth success of the season. If he does, he will then be within one of equaling The Bard's all-time record. At an difference of only 51b record. At at difference of only, 51b Provideo ought to be up to beating Prismatio. So the fly in the outstment must be Pacific Gold at a difference of 151b. However, after good runs at York, where he was numer-up to Local Suntor in the Convivial Stakes, and Ascot Pacific Gold gave the impression that he might be going off the boil when he finished only sixth in the Cornwallis, again at Ascot. So I give Provideo a good

 Tonight's major films are both satirical stabs at the American body politic. One draws blood; the other falls but forces a filinch. AND JUSTICE FOR ALL (BBC 1, 9.25pm) is a 1979 Norman Jewison black comedy with Al Pacino as attorney Arthur Kirkland, whose freshman zsal banks its shins against the deep-round tree of American (Injustice. The plot surrounds Kirldand with gargoyles on the wall of jurisprudence – Judge Rayford ack Warden), half in love with death, who plays Russian roulette in the lavatory, and Judge Fleming (John Forsythe), a bring back the guillotine rightist who thinks Fair Trial is a brand of aftershave. Sharp and amusing, the film drops fractionally short of the polen force attained by its generic brothers Network and The Hospital because both Pacino and the script

CHOICE are a little too eager to be loved. • FIRST FAMILY (Channel 4, 11.20pm) stars Bob Newhert as US president Manfred Link. Made in 1980, just pre-Reagan, the film is a kind of Anyone for Jimmy?, mocking the "Doesn't the buck usually stop here?" style of well-meaning dither adopted by the then President Cartar. The script has a good ear for the ambushes of vota-se the ambushes of vota-seeking speech: "people, black, red, white, yellow and all the equally attractive shades in between" – and a pleasant entertainment is marred only by a kindergarten sub-plot involving a tribe of African savages.
This is one of a season of celtuioid snooks cocked at the Presidency;
Channel 4's gently mocking accompaniment to the election race.

 The meeting, in the Kremlin in 1934, between Josef Stalin and H G Wells has the appearance of history playing a game of consequences. The New Statesman published a verbatim transcript of their exchanges, on which John Theocaris has based an excellent feature, STALIN v WELLS (Radio 3, 9.15pm). Publication of the conversation provoked a flurry of letters between Wells. Shaw, Keynes and others, in which the cracking of egos is plainly heard. Read by sound-alikes, the correspondence provides a waggish tall to the dramatised meeting in which Paul Nicholson as a prissy Wells and Timothy Wells as (again) a booming Stalin provide a perfect vocal contrast - consome to black bread and borsch. Mark Lawson

London and Paris split by explosive incident

Continued from page 1 The explosives were duly hidden under a bush near a marquee in the garden. Within minutes, they were found by the dogs. French poloce congratulated the British on the skills of their dogs, and everyone apparently went away happy. Thereafter, however, no one seems quite clear how or why things went wrong. The usually well-informed Le Monde, quoiing the same "authorized sources". Suggests that senior British police officers were suddenly attacked by a fit of "petty vengeance" against their French colleagues after a series of minor irritations between the forces over whether M Mitterrand's security guards had the right to be armed, and British police had the right to check those arms.

In London, a French Embassy statement said: "In the context of the cooperation between the French and British security services on the occasion of the state visit of the President of the French Republie to Great Britain, the French Embassy asked the British services to contribute to the protection of the ambassador's "During those operations, the customary working equipment of a French bomb disposal expert was at the origin of a regrettable misunderstanding. On the French side, it is considered that this incident must not modify the excellent climate in which the President of the French Republic's state visit to Great Britain is taking

The French Ministry of the Interior confirmed last night that a bomb-disposal expert always formed part of the Security forces which accompanied M Mitterrand on his trips. The expert carried the "material necessary for his operations of detecting and intervention". That included a small amount of explosive which might be needed to explode suspect packages, the Ministry said.

The expert in question had carried out his duties in the normal way within the pre-cincts of the French Ambassato famine-stricken Ethiopia.

While conceding that there would always be differences of interpretation, he said that the board had a strong negotiating team, that was united in its approach to the negotiations. He emphasized that it had never been accepted that he would automatically become a member of the negotiating team but would be available to advise Mr Ian MacGregor, the board chairman, if requested.

In spite of Mr Eaton's denial of a rift in senior board thinking it is known that the more senior managers in the coalfields have been unhappy with the public presentation of the management's side of the dispute and also the strategy adopted in approaches to the NUM.

-However, in spite of those reservations it is thought that Mr Eaton helped to create the climate that enabled the Nacods settlement to be reached.

Frank Johnson on the campaign trail

The second most average US city

Reagan, we arrived on Wednesday at Colobmus, Ohio, This, we foreigners remembered, tends to be considered second only to Peoria, Illinois, as the most average American city. Conscious of such a reputation, the citizens of Colombus, once Mr Reagan came among them, proceeded to react in an extremely average American way.

The high school band was even more magnificently raucous than it had been the previous day in such places as Palmdale, California. The crowd laughed ar Mr Reagan's jokes even more than they had in Medford, Oregon, and Seattle, Washington State. We could judge this for certain. They were the same jokes. "If Walter Mondale's campaign were a Broadway show" one of them page 1 show," one of them runs, "il would be called Promises, Promises." Tremendous laughter. "If I could find a way to dress up in his tax programme," begins another. I could scare the devil out of the neighbours on Hallo-we'en." Huge cheers. "If a Mondale administration were a novel" a third jest starts. "it would have to be read back to front so as to get the Happy ending first."

This last, besides demonstrating that Mr Reagan does not read novels with unhappy endings, sometimes causes the President some difficulties, with its need to remember complex imageries such as an ending which comes first.

Sometimes the joke comes out, before Mr Reagan corrects himself as a happy novel which would have to be read first, or a beginning which would have to be read at the end. Whether he gets it right or not, the crowd always laughs tearfully. And so, on the campus of the Ohio State University at Columbus, which is by defi-nation the second most average campus in America, the President was as loved as every where else in the nation except in rivel Peorta, Illinois, where presumably he is loved just a little more averagely than in Columbus. A hundred or so hecklers raved from a distant balcony on the subject of average America. For, being free to express dissent, the people of average America do not all agree with one another or with President Reagan - just most of them agree with one another, and Moving inland from the with him. "This may break West Coast with President their hearts," said Mr Reagan interrupting his text with a toss of the head towards the head towards the hecklers, "but I can't hear a word they are saying." Vast cheers from the majority Mr Reagan being one of the few politicians anywhere who can turn to advatage the fact that he is a little deaf. More typical of the crowd were the chants, breaking into Mr Reagan's speech, of "USA, USA" and the now-legendary four more years". Just before the President's arrival the chairman explained that Mr Reagan would be greefed by a Mr Woody Hayes. This announcement generated eestasy in the throng Inquiries among the natives by us foreigners vielded the intelligence that Mr Hayes was a football coach of incredible fame,

He was in the habit of terrifying a whole team, such were the ferocious ingenuity of his tactics. And that was merely his effect on his own team. Furthermore, he was also renowned as a man with opinions about subjects other than football, not least polities. In short, America's Brian-Clough.

Mr Hayes welcomed Mr Reagan to Ohio State. The keagan to Unio State, The band, having ushered in the President with Hail to the Chief, launched into a vigor-ous work of simple harmony which drove the crowd to still greater excitement. Inquiries revealed this to be the dreaded Ohio football fight song: "Back to back".

Mr Hayes embarked on a comparison between politics and football. Mr Reagan paid careful attention, and noded agreement. A lack of a thorough grasp of American football now created difficultles for those of us whose role, in this emotionally charged atmosphere, was that of interpreter of American civilication to British readers. For. as one understands it, the sport consists of a series of stoppages in between brief spells consisting of large numbers of astronauts falling over one another.

Mr Reagan made his speech. The crowd raised a heer even greater than before. Only the balloons failed to come down from the roof.
After all, this was only the second most average city. That would not have happened in Pretoria.

The papers

The Daily Star, commenting on the planting of explosives in central London by a French security official, says: "coming less than a formight after the irak bomb attack at Brighton it is inhuman." at Brighton, it is inhuman and

The Daily Mirror, commenting on President Mitterand's address to both Houses of Parliament, says.
"The French President is no hat French resident is no warmonger. His appeal for disarriament talks was as forceful as his warning against unilateralism. That makes it even more important for about a base to listen to here. Labour's leaders to listen to him. If they hope to form a socialist government in this country after the next election, they should beed the words of France's socialist Presi-
